CHAPTER I

INTRODUCTION

The late Sir Frederic Kenyon, perhaps the best known scholar of modern times in the field of Biblical philology, once wrote: "There is indeed no possibility that we shall ever find manuscripts of the Hebrew text going back to a period before the formation of the text which we call Massoretic" --i.e. before the second century A.D. Students of the Biblical record had resigned themselves to being content with texts dating many centuries after their archetypes. In the summer of 1947, however, the curtain lifted on a new dramatic scene in the story of the Bible. Announcement was made from Jerusalem that several old manuscripts, apparently sacred in nature, had been discovered in caves near the Dead Sea. The scholarly world buckled to attention. As sketchy reports began to infiltrate the public press to the effect that the manuscript finds would lay bare the historical foundations of Christendom and eventually destroy the unique claims of Christianity, the lay world also became intensely interested in the cache of scrolls. The widespread interest in the scrolls on the part of the man-on-the-street has been attributed by some to the general upsurge of interest in all things religious reported by most of America's denominations since World War II. Today, after cohabiting more than a decade with the scrolls, Christianity appears none the weaker. But the Dead Sea Scrolls are leaving their mark on the academic community. We now possess a fascinating story of a forgotten community of the past and their strange traditions. The possibility of more discoveries in the future, and the continually maturing insight into the significance of the scrolls have rejuvenated textual criticism of the Scriptures. It is upon the most complete scroll of all the finds, the St. Mark's Monastery Scroll of Isaiah, that we will focus our attention.

About 115 years before the discovery of the Dead Sea Scrolls, a young man of Palmyra, New York, by the unpretentious name of Joseph Smith, Jr., was telling a strange story. A set of metallic plates, he affirmed, had been conveyed to him by a divinely commissioned messenger, which plates happened to contain some of the writings of the ancient prophet, Isaiah. If the historical claims of the story on the plates be valid, the Isaiah passages engraved thereon have been derived from a source very close to the original, c. 600 B.C. Such a text, if preserved intact,[1] would be relatively free from scribal and transmission errors, at least to a greater extent than the later Massoretic Text that has come down to our times.

[1]Transmission of a sacred text on plates of brass or other metallic substances would eliminate the need for frequent recopying. Throughout the Book of Mormon "plates" are mentioned as an important medium for recording sacred and secular history.

The passages of Isaiah in the Book of Mormon are patterned after those of the King James translation. Almost all students of the Book of Mormon today will freely admit that Joseph Smith did use the King James Version of the Bible in his work. The question now arises -- whence the variations? Of 433 verses of Isaiah in the Book of Mormon, 234, or 54%, reveal variant readings from the King James to some degree.[1] Do these indicate that where the text before Joseph diverged from the King James, Joseph made the change to correspond with the more ancient text? If so, perhaps the Dead Sea Isaiah Scroll, because of its antiquity, may give some verification to these variations.

The main purpose of this study is to suggest an answer to the following question: Do the variations of the Book of Mormon Isaiah from the King James Version correspond to any significant degree with the variations of the Dead Sea Isaiah from the Massoretic Text? A secondary consideration is a comparison of the Book of Mormon Isaiah and the King James Isaiah with the same passages in modern translation. Most of these later versions have had access to ancient manuscripts that were unknown to the King James translators, and hence may shed some light on troublesome passages. Isaiah is generally considered one of the most difficult of the prophetic books to translate because of its extraordinary literary scope and unusually varied vocabulary,[1] made still more frustrating for the translator by the frequent use of hapax legomena.[2] Often, therefore, the translation of a particular word has been just a contextual guess. Comparison with other ancient language versions and the increasing knowledge of etymologies and comparative Semitic usually makes the renditions of the modern versions more probable.

Included also in the comparison is the Inspired Version. Members of the Latter-day Saint religious community who believe this version to have a little more reliability than other versions will be interested in seeing how the Inspired Version corresponds to the King James and Book of Mormon texts, as well as to the modern translations.

Previous Studies Done

Many gaps and contradictions in the account of the coming forth of the Dead Sea Scrolls still need attention. The ancient people of the Dead Sea Community still are strangers to us. A calm, penetrating investigation of the scrolls is just beginning. A few eminent scholars have noted some of the variations of the St. Mark's Scroll from the Massoretic Text and have sought to interpret these variant readings, but there has been no comprehensive work published to point out all the variations. The general opinion of the scholars seems to be that the St. Mark's Isaiah Scroll is so similar to the Massoretic Text that a thorough presentation is unnecessary. Current study is being concentrated on the non-Biblical scrolls and the community that produced them.

Among the Latter-day Saints, some beginning work has been done on the "Isaiah in the Book of Mormon" problem. With the charge of fraudulence and plagiarism constantly plaguing the Book of Mormon since its first publication, many critics have found its Biblical style an inviting area for attack. In our present consideration, we will not be concerned about the validity of the Book of Mormon claims, for the topic for discussion poses a fair academic question whether or not the Book of Mormon is what it claims to be.

Grant Vest, under the direction of Dr. Sidney Sperry at Brigham Young University, wrote a thesis in 1938 entitled "The Problem of Isaiah in the Book of Mormon." The prime objective of this thesis was to examine the variations of the Book of Mormon Isaiah, suggesting where possible what the original text might have been. Mr. Vest's conclusion is recorded in part as follows:

> The data confirm, in a general way, the hypothesis, namely, that the Book of Mormon revisions of the text of Isaiah reflect both the taste of the translator > and the use of some objective source, presumably the manuscripts he claims to have had.[1]

Limitations of the Study

The Book of Mormon quotes twenty-one entire chapters of Isaiah, two through fourteen, twenty-nine, and forty-eight through fifty-four, all of which we will be comparing with other versions. Only a limited number of Bible versions could be included in the comparison. Besides the Book of Mormon and King James Version, we will be using the Inspired Version, the Revised Standard Version, and the Jewish Publication Society edition.

The problem of Deutero-Isaiah will not be treated in this work. Needless to say, if the Book of Mormon is indeed what it claims to be historically, the modern trend to divide the authorship of the Book of Isaiah among two or more authors needs reconsideration.

Bible Versions Used

King James Version--The scholarly translators of this version built soundly on the foundation laid by their predecessors. The firm basis of their work was the Bishop's Bible of 1568. Consultation of the earlier versions was thorough. Forty-eight to fifty scholars worked to bring forth in 1611 what has become a magnificent monument to the English language. The outstanding quality of the work is due in part to the utilization of the best scholars available. The version was the product of no single man or school, but rather the deliberate work of a body of scholars representing many classes and opinions.

The previous forty years had been a period of extraordinary expression in English literature. The translators were riding the crest of the wave of artistic excellence.

Reverence for divinity was evident in the approach to the Tetragrammaton. Following the precedent of ancient Greek and Latin translators, and the long established practice of reading in the synagogue, the Divine Name was represented by the appellation, "the LORD," and in some cases, "GOD."

This version received not only the support of the English scholars, but in time also the devotion of the common people of the English-speaking nations. It was this English version of the Bible that graced the Smith home in Palmyra, New York.

Inspired Version--The Eighth Article of Faith of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints states: "We believe the Bible to be the word of God as far as it is translated correctly." Concern about the reliability of the Bible has always been a concern in the Restoration Movement. Shortly after the organization of the Church, Joseph Smith began a revision of the scriptures under what he believed to be divine direction. The preface to the Inspired Version begins:

> This work is given to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints and to the public in pursuance of the commandment of God.
> As concerning the manner of translation and correction, it is evident, from the manuscripts and the testimony of those who were conversant with the facts, that it was done by direct revelation from God.
> It was begun in June, 1830, and was finished July 2, 1833.[1]

"Inspired Version" is actually a misnomer in that a version, strictly speaking, is a translation. Joseph Smith revised, rather than translated.

Revised Standard Version--Language is dynamic. As the life of a people unfolds, their language is constantly being adapted to meet their changing needs. The theologians continually remind us that with respect to "the Gospel," there is always the need to "speak to the times." Today many modern editions of the scriptures in 20th century vernacular are on the market. One of the best known and most scholarly is the Revised Standard Version. This version is a revision of the American Standard Version, published in 1901, which was in turn a revision of the King James Version. The Old Testament was first released in 1952. It follows the thought patterns of the King James Version where possible, modernizing the vocabulary and idioms, and retranslating often to bring forth a "more probable" meaning. Modern punctuation such as quotation marks and exclamation points help to clarify meaning and grammatical relationships, as well as to convey more adequately the mood of the scriptures. Poetry is distinguished from prose by the format. The narrative sections, by following standard paragraph form, are arranged to facilitate reading with comfort to the eye. The devotees of the Revised Standard Version hope that it will someday achieve the status of a world classic.

The Holy Scriptures (Jewish Publication Society edition)--Ancient Israel has given its scriptures to the world. Ironically, however, Jews not acquainted with Hebrew, in medieval and modern times, have had to approach their own religious heritage through the eyes of other peoples. English-speaking Jews, annoyed at finding the Christological implications in "gentile" versions of the Old Testament, have long been acutely aware of the need for a translation to call their own. The Holy Scriptures claims to fulfill this need. The Jewish Publication Society of America, with headquarters in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, first issued in 1917 its edition of the scriptures, said to be a "new translation according to the Masoretic Text with the aid of previous versions and with constant consultation of Jewish authorities."[1] We read in the preface:

> The present translation is the first for which a group of men representative of Jewish learning among English-speaking Jews assume joint responsibility, all previous efforts in the English language having been the work of individual translators. It has a character of its own. It aims to combine the spirit of Jewish tradition with the results of biblical scholarship, ancient, mediaeval, and modern. It gives to the Jewish world a translation of the Scriptures done by men imbued with the Jewish consciousness, while the non-Jewish world, it is hoped, will welcome a translation that presents many passages from the Jewish traditional point of view.[2]

[1]The Holy Scriptures (Philadelphia: The Jewish Publication Society of America, 1946), p. i.

[2]Ibid., p. vii.

Although many varied versions are listed as sources of reference, the phraseology of The Holy Scriptures bears a striking resemblence to the language of the King James Version. Faithfulness to the approved Massoretic Text is demonstrated where the translators have accepted obscure passages of the Massoretic Text rather than modify their work by the clearer readings of non-Hebrew texts. Such fidelity to an ideal is a welcome stranger in a world dedicated mostly to comfort and convenience.

Any contribution that this thesis will make will be but a first approximation to the beginning of the work to be done. There is a saying attributed to St. Jerome that expresses the feelings of the writer: "Sicut enim a perfecta scientia procul sumus, levioris culpae arbitramur saltem parum, quamomnino nihil dicere," which, roughly translated, reads: "Remote though we be from perfect knowledge, we consider it less blameworthy to say too little than to say nothing at all."

CHAPTER II

THE BOOK OF MORMON

The Book of Mormon is an enigma to modern religious thinking. There was a time when it could be dismissed easily as a product of the Devil or the vicious money-making scheme of one or more diabolical swindlers: but today it is unfashionable to believe in a Devil and "unliberal" to accuse any religious founder with malicious intent to deceive. The current approach to such an extraordinary event as the ministry of a heavenly messenger would be to hypothesize in terms of a self-induced manifestation of subconscious psychological needs and drives. But how does one explain a tangible book that anyone may read, claiming to be the product of such a visitation, in psychological terms alone? More than one person hefted the plates. More than one person bore witness to the reality of the Messenger. What "reasonable" explanation may be forthcoming?

Over the past century many theories have been advanced to account for the origin of the "Mormon Bible." J. N. Washburn has summarized the various explanations into four general categories.

1. A group of men, with Joseph Smuth (or someone else) as the instigator, wrote the Book of Mormon to capitalize upon the ignorance of backwoods people. There may have been also the added incentive of publicity and power.

2. Someone, presumably Joseph Smith, Oliver Cowdery, Sidney Rigdon, or any combination of them and perhaps others, copied or stole the material of the record from the writings of another and fitted it to their own needs.

3. Joseph Smith alone wrote the Book of Mormon: perhaps working under some spurious or diabolical power.

4. Joseph Smith, with Oliver Cowdery, and others acting as scribe, produced the book by divine means.[1]

The constant emergence of new theories and the disagreement among anti-Mormon critics attest to the inadequacy of most of the theories that have been proposed.

For the purposes of this study we shall proceed on the hypothesis that Joseph Smith did at one time possess an ancient record containing portions of the work of Isaiah ben Amoz, who is world-renouned as one of the greatest prophetic spokesmen in the Old Testament.

Joseph Smith's own story of the coming forth of the Book of Mormon is now reproduced for any reader who might not be acquainted with this strange tale.

> . . . on the evening of the above-mentioned twenty-first of September (1823), after I had retired to my bed for the night, I betook myself to prayer and supplication to Almighty God for forgiveness of all my sins and follies, and also for a manifestation to me, that I might know of my state and standing before him; for I had full confidence in obtaining a divine manifestation, as I previously had one.

While I was thus in the act of calling upon God, I discovered a light appearing in my room, which continued to increase until the room was lighter than at noonday, when immediately a personage appeared at my bedside, standing in the air, for his feet did not touch the floor.

He had on a loose robe of most exquisite whiteness. It was a whiteness beyond anything earthly I had ever seen; . . .

He called me by name, and said unto me that he was a messenger sent from the presence of God to me, and that his name was Moroni; that God had a work for me to do; and that my name should be had for good and evil among all nations, kindreds, and tongues, or that it should be both good and evil spoken of among all people.

He said there was a book deposited, written upon gold plates, giving an account of the former inhabitants of this continent, and the source from whence they sprang. He also said that the fulness of the everlasting Gospel was contained in it, as delivered by the Savior to the ancient inhabitants;

Also, that there were two stones in silver bows--and these stones, fastened to a breastplate, constituted what is called the Urim and Thummim--deposited with the plates; and the possession and use of these stones were what constituted "seers" in ancient or former times; and that God had prepared them for the purpose of translating the book . . .

After this communication, I saw the light in the room begin to gather immediately around the person of him who had been speaking to me, and it continued to do so until the room was again left dark, except just around him; when, instantly I saw, as it were, a conduit open right up into heaven, and he ascended till he entirely disappeared, and the room was left as it had been before this heavenly light had made its appearance.

I lay musing on the singularity of the scene, and marveling greatly at what had been told to me by this extraordinary messenger; when, in the midst of my meditation, I suddenly discovered that my room was again beginning to get lighted, and in an instant, as it were, the same heavenly messenger was again by my bedside.

He commenced, and again related the very same things which he had done at his first visit, without the least variation; which having done, he informed me of great judgments which were coming upon the earth, with great desolations by famine, sword, and pestilence; and that these grievous judgments would come on the earth in this generation. Having related these things, he again ascended as he had done before.

By this time, so deep were the impressions made on my mind, that sleep had fled from my eyes, and I lay overwhelmed in astonishment at what I had both seen and heard. But what was my surprise when again I beheld the same messenger at my bedside, and heard him rehearse or repeat over again to me the same things as before; . . .

After this third visit, he again ascended into heaven as before, and I was again left to ponder on the strangeness of what I had just experienced; when almost immediately after the heavenly messenger had ascended from me for the third time, the cock crowed, and I found that day was approaching, so that our interviews must have occupied the whole of that night.

I shortly after arose from my bed, and, as usual, went to the necessary labors of the day; . . .

Convenient to the village of Manchester, Ontario county, New York, stands a hill of considerable size, and the most elevated of any in the neighborhood. On the west side of this hill, not far from the top, under a stone of considerable size, lay the plates, deposited in a stone box. This stone was thick and rounding in the middle on the upper side, and thinner towards the edges, so that the middle part of it was visible above the ground, but the edge all around was covered with earth.

Having removed the earth, I obtained a lever, which I got fixed under the edge of the stone, and with a little exertion raised it up. I looked in, and there indeed did I behold the plates, the Urim and Thummim, and the breastplate, as stated by the messenger. The box in which they lay was formed by laying stones together in some kind of cement. In the bottom of the box were laid two stones crossways of the box, and on these stones lay the plates and the other things with them.

I made an attempt to take them out, but was forbidden by the messenger, and was again informed that the time for bringing them forth had not yet arrived, neither would it, until four years from that time; but he told me that I should come to that place precisely in one year from that time, and that he would there meet with me, and that I should continue to do so until the time should come for obtaining the plates.

Accordingly, as I had been commanded, I went at the end of each year, and at each time I found the same messenger there, and received instruction and intelligence from him at each of our interviews, respecting what the Lord was going to do, and how and in what manner his kingdom was to be conducted in the last days . . . .

> At length the time arrived for obtaining the plates, the Urim and Thummim, and the breastplate. On the twenty-second day of September, one thousand eight hundred and twenty-seven, having gone as usual at the end of another year to the place where they were deposited, the same heavenly messenger delivered them up to me with this charge: that I should be responsible for them; that if I should let them go carelessly, or through any neglect of mine, I should be cut off; but that if I would use all my endeavors to preserve them, until he, the messenger, should call for them, they should be protected . . . .
> But by the wisdom of God, they remained safe in my hands, until I had accomplished by them what was required at my hand. When, according to arrangements, the messenger called for them, I delivered them up to him; and he has them in his charge until this day being the second day of May, one thousand eight hundred and thirty-eight.[1]

The Book of Mormon purports to be an abridged record of "the people of Nephi, and also of the Lamanites"[2] who journeyed under inspired leadership from ancient Judah over the sea to a distant promised land. Included is a short account of an earlier migration, "the people of Jared who were scattered at the time the Lord confounded the language of the people, when they were building a tower to get to heaven."[3]

The dominating purpose of the Book of Mormon is "the convincing of the Jew and Gentile that JESUS is the CHRIST, the ETERNAL GOD, manifesting himself unto all nations."[4] The most spectacular claim within the story itself is that Jesus Christ, after his death and resurrection in Palestine, appeared before the descendants of Nephi in a land called Bountiful to instruct and comfort them.

The Lehi Colony, who brought with them the prophecies of Isaiah, left Jerusalem c. 600 B.C. about a century after Isaiah's active ministry.

Isaiah was not the only prophetic leader represented by the written word among the peoples of the Book of Mormon. Nephi tells us

> And after they had given thanks unto the God of Israel, my father, Lehi, took the records which were engraven upon the plates of brass, and he did search them from the beginning.
>
> And he beheld that they did contain the five books of Moses, which gave an account of the creation of the world, and also of Adam and Eve, who were our first parents;
>
> And also a record of the Jews from the beginning, even down to the commencement of the reign of Zedekiah, king of Judah;
> And also the prophecies of the holy prophets, from the beginning, even down to the commencement of the reign of Zedekiah; and also many prophecies which have been spoken by the mouth of Jeremiah.[1]

Yet Isaiah is quoted extensively, almost to the exclusion of all others. The reason for Isaiah's popularity may perhaps be found in extractions from the Book of Mormon record itself.

> And I did rehearse unto them the words of Isaiah, who spake concerning the restoration of the Jews, or of the house of Israel; and after they were restored they should no more be confounded, neither should they be scattered again. And it came to pass that I did speak many words unto my brethren, that they were pacified and did humble themselves before the Lord.[2]

[1] I Nephi 5:10-13.

[2] I Nephi 15:20.

> And I did read many things unto them which were written in the book of Moses; but that I might more fully persuade them to believe in the Lord their Redeemer I did read unto them that which was written by the prophet Isaiah; for I did liken all scriptures unto us, that it might be for our profit and learning.[1]

> And now, behold, I would speak unto you concerning things which are, or which are to come; wherefore, I will read you the words of Isaiah. And they are the words which my brother has desired that I should speak unto you. And I speak unto you for your sakes, that ye may learn and glorify the name of your God.
> And now, the words which I shall read are they which Isaiah spake concerning all the house of Israel; wherefore, they may be likened unto you, for ye are of the house of Israel. And there are many things which have been spoken by Isaiah which may be likened unto you, because ye are of the house of Israel.[2]

> And now I, Nephi, write more of the words of Isaiah, for my soul delighteth in his words. For I will liken his words unto my people, and I will send them forth unto all my children, for he verily saw my Redeemer, even as I have seen him.[3]

Nephi's "soul delighteth" in Isaiah's words because his message was pertinent to Nephi's times and situation, because Isaiah was a powerful witness to the existence of the Redeemer, which conviction Nephi also shared, and because the reading of Isaiah was conducive to the spirit of worship.

During his appearance among the Book of Mormon peoples, the resurrected Lord gave the following admonition, revealing his high esteem for the prophet Isaiah:

> And Now, behold, I say unto you, that ye ought to search these things. Yea, a commandment I give

---

[1] I Nephi 19:23.

[2] 2 Nephi 6:4,5.

[3] 2 Nephi 11:2.

unto you that ye search these things diligently; for great are the words of Isaiah.

For surely he spake as touching all things concerning my people which are of the house of Israel; therefore it must needs be that he must speak also to the Gentiles.

And all things that he spake have been and shall be, even according to the words which he spake.[1]

Mormon, the last abridger of the book, from whom the work has taken its name, gives this counsel:

> For the eternal purposes of the Lord shall roll on, until all his promises shall be fulfilled.
> Search the prophecies of Isaiah. Behold, I cannot write them. Yea, behold I say unto you, that those saints who have gone before me, who have possessed this land, shall cry, yea, even from the dust will they cry unto the Lord; and as the Lord liveth he will remember the covenant which he hath made with them.[2]

And so we have seen that some of the leading characters of the Book of Mormon have evinced profound respect for the writings of Isaiah. They have paid the highest possible tribute to a literary figure--the reading and use of his work.

The writings of Isaiah are introduced into the Book of Mormon text in the following order:

1 Nephi 20, 21	----	Isa. 48, 49
2 Nephi 7, 8	----	Isa. 50, 51
2 Nephi 12-24	----	Isa. 2-14
Mosiah 14	----	Isa. 53
3 Nephi 20	----	Isa. 52
3 Nephi 22	----	Isa. 54

The alterations of the Book of Mormon Isaiah from that of the King James Version are our main concern. Several possible reasons for the variant readings may be entertained.

[1] 3 Nephi 23:1-3.

[2] Mormon 8:22,23.

1. Where the variations occur, we witness an attempt to bring the text represented in the King James Version into harmony with the more ancient text used as the Vorlage[1] by the translator of the Book of Mormon.

2. The Book of Mormon translator made the changes because of his own taste pertaining to literary style i.e. we find a personal preference in phraseology without an attempt to alter the conceptual meaning behind the words.

3. In the production of the Book of Mormon Isaiah, several versions were consulted and some of the variant readings were adopted.

4. The changes were intended as clarification of obscure language constructions.

5. The variations represent an attempt to enfuse an external theology into the passages, giving support to the translator's own personal ideology.

6. The changes may be explained mostly by error in reading, copying, and printing.

7. Any combination of the above reasons may have interacted to produce the Isaiah passages of the Book of Mormon in their present state.

As a starting point for the purposes of this study, we will tentatively be accepting the first hypothesis listed above.

Two editions of the Book of Mormon have been employed in the comparison: one published by the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, and the other published by the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. The main difference between the two is the versification and punctuation.

[1]A Vorlage is the text "laying before" a transmittor of the sacred text, from which he is copying.

The Latter-day Saint Edition--Orson Pratt divided the Book of Mormon into chapters and verses with references in 1879. The book was first issued in double column pages, with chapter headings, chronological footnotes, pronouncing vocabulary, and index in 1920.

The Reorganized Church Edition--In 1906 a committee was appointed by the General Conference of the Church to prepare a uniform plan for division of chapters and verses. All verses from Isaiah were made to correspond with the Inspired Version. The committee compared the current edition with the printer's manuscript and the Kirtland Edition published in 1837. The text was then paragraphed according to the Palmyra Edition of 1830.

In most cases of punctuation difference, the Reorganized Church Book of Mormon corresponds with the King James Version. Any punctuation that will affect the meaning and any change of wording will be noted in the comparison section.

The First Edition, or the Palmyra Edition, was consulted for clarification when the need arose. Where it diverges from the present edition, notation will be made.

While the interpretation of the data of this study may perhaps be tempered somewhat by the writer's personal conviction that the Book of Mormon is sacred scripture, the promise is given that "academic honesty" will be the prime objective of this study. The Book of Mormon is not on trial here, nor are the Dead Sea Scrolls. No ultimate answers or pronunciamentos will be forth-coming from this study; only, as it were, a tiny piece of a jig-saw puzzle, hopefully submitted with the expectation that it may some day be fitted into the vast picture of man's knowledge to help give us a more precise understanding of one corner of the universe of human thought.

CHAPTER III

TRANSMISSION OF THE SACRED TEXT

Until 1947 no Hebrew manuscripts in the possession of the textual critics dated earlier than A.D. 1008, although there existed a few portions of the Old Testament dating from A.D. 850-900 and a few early fragments such as the first century A.D. Nash Papyrus.[1] All the extant manuscripts had come down to us through a process of standardization initiated at the Council of Jamnia in the first century A.D. and culminating in the rabbinical schools of the Massoretes flourishing in the seventh and eighth centuries. Attempts were made to cleanse the scriptures by eliminating unauthorized texts. Now with the discovery of the Isaiah scrolls in the region of the Dead Sea, scholars are able to by-pass the Massoretes and Jamnia in one leap to perhaps within a half a millenium of Isaiah's lifetime.

It is difficult to appreciate the excitement of the textual critics over the discovery of the Dead Sea Scrolls unless one has some insight into the problems involved in the transmission of ancient manuscripts.

By definition, a manuscript is "written by hand."

[1]Norman K. Gottwald, A Light to the Nations (New York: Harper & Brothers, 1959), p. 42.

When a new copy of any part of the scriptures was needed, the laborious process of manual reproduction of the text was undertaken, subject to all the frailties of the human hand and mind. Some types of errors frequently noted by textual critics in their analysis of ancient scriptures probably have occurred in the St. Mark's Isaiah Scroll. Included among the most common errors of transmission are the following:

1. improper joining of words together--

2. improper word division--

The parchments used by the ancient copyists were scarce and valuable. Every inch of space was needed for the recording of the sacred text. As a result, words were often run into one another and consequently, occasionally divided at the wrong place, hindering understanding of the message of the text.

3. inclusion of extraneous matter as part of the text--

Often a marginal gloss or correction noted in the margin area has been interpreted to be part of the text and incorporated into the body of the manuscript.

4. confusion regarding the forms of some letters--

In written Hebrew, it is often difficult to distinguish between the Beth (ב) and the Caph (כ), the Daleth (ד) and the Resh (ר), and He (ה) and the Cheth (ח).

5. Haplography--the unintentional omission of a word that has been repeated in the Vorlage.

6. Dittography--the repetition of a word or phrase through carelessness.

7. Homoioteleuton, or "same ending,"--

The eye skips over material to the same word or a word with the same ending further on in the passage.

8. Homoioarchton, or "same beginning,"--

The eye skips down to the beginning of a word further on in the passage, similar to what properly should be written.

9. deliberate alterations--

Emendations are sometimes made to avoid undue reference to anthropomorphisms and anthropopathisms with respect to Deity, to eliminate excessive mention of pagan gods, to provide euphemisms replacing obscenities, and to "correct" what the scribe may have considered to be an incorrect form.

One can easily surmise that the more times a text has been copied, the more opportunities the above mentioned variations and others would have to creep into the text. The most profound reverence for the text and the most careful copying techniques are still not a sure safeguard against the imperfections of transmission that may creep into the work.

The Massoretic Text--The early Rabbis of scattered Judaism felt the need for a standardized sacred text which could stand for them as a tangible symbol of the unity of their God and the vitality of his Word. Dating from A.D. 500 until the ninth century and even later, we find schools flourishing in Babylonia and at Tiberias in palestine. These scholars were called Massoretes,[1] their name being derived from the Hebrew word for "tradition." Their work consisted of collecting the traditions concerning grammar, variant readings, and interpretations for every book of scripture and noting them at the side in the massorah parva or at the top and bottom in the massorah magna.

[1] Sometimes spelled Masoretes.

The most important task of the Massoretes was to provide a vowel-pointing system. Of four possible pronunciation schemes, one prevailed. Kenyon says about this system:

> Eventually the Tiberian system superseded those of Palestine and Babylonia, and is now universally used. The Tiberian system is highly elaborate and, indeed, artificial, and is more than an aid to pronunciation. Behind it is a very complex scheme of grammatical rules, which were not simply systematized by the Massoretes, but to some extent invented by them. For, as Kahle has shown, the pronunciation which was fixed for all time was not that which was then normally used by Jews, but the ideal pronunciation as the Massoretes conceived it. It follows therefore that Hebrew grammar, as it has been understood since the time of the Tiberian Massoretes, is different in detail from that of the Hebrew of Palestine in the first century, or at the time when the Old Testament books were written, or for that matter of the Babylonian Massoretes themselves.[1]

The Massoretes introduced the Ketib-Qere phenomenon into the scriptures. The Ketib was that which was written in the text; the Qere, appearing in the margin, was that which should be substituted for the Ketib when the passage was read.

There are several theories concerning the function of the Ketib and Qere:

1. The Qere is the more correct or more likely reading with regard to grammar or context.

2. The Qere is a euphemistic guide against irrever-

[1]Kenyon, op. cit., pp. 77-78

ence and obscenity.

3. The Qere points out variant readings found in texts other than the scribe's Vorlage.

4. An ecclectic view would combine two or all of the above theories.

Ketib-Qere appears in almost 1500 passages of the Massoretic Text.[1]

Other contributions of the Massoretes include the complex system of accents, serving the function of punctuation, and indicating "cantillation" -- i.e. the proper inflections of the voice in public reading.[2] The Massoretes also number the verses, words, and letters of every book. This reflects their determination to transmit the sacred text precisely. Reverence for the scriptures pervaded every slightest detail of the prodigious work done by the Massoretes.

The Septuagint--This version, the complete Old Testament and Apocrypha, translated for the Greek-speaking Jews of Alexandria, will be consulted in our study. The origin and date have been obscured by time, although elaborate legends have grown up about its coming forth which no doubt contain a substratum of genuine fact. At many places in the Septuagint, translators appear to have been using a Vorlage dissimilar to the Hebrew text we now possess. Where the Septuagint supports a reading in the St. Mark's Isaiah Scroll against that of the Massoretic Text, notation will be made. Because of lack of time, space, and training, thorough consultation of the Septuagint cannot be undertaken. The many instances where the Septuagint supports the Massoretic Text against the St. Mark's Isaiah Scroll will not be considered, nor where the Septuagint differs from both the Hebrew readings.

Textual critics had long dreamed of and hoped for the discovery of a manuscript that would not be corrupted by generations of copyists. By such a find, the reliability of the present Massoretic Text and the Septuagint could be tested.

CHAPTER IV

THE DEAD SEA SCROLLS

The Finding of the Scrolls

The terrain around the north end of the Dead Sea is bleak, rugged wilderness. Only a few semi-nomadic Arab tribes call this area home.

According to the Arabs, the group of ruins called Khirbet Qumran, three miles north of Ain Feshkha, is the site of the ill-fated city of Gomorrah.[1] Out of this deserted site has come a story that has captured the imagination of the world.

Contradictions and incongruities abound in the account of the finding of the scrolls. With the constant retelling it is now sometimes difficult to tell fact from legend.[2]

A young Bedouin of the Ta'amire tribe one day happened upon one of the greatest document finds of all time. In his interview with Mr. Najib Khoury of Jordan, Muhammad Ed Deeb gave his own story of what happened, an English translation of which follows:

[1]A less known tradition identifies the ruins with "the City of Salt" mentioned in Joshua 15:61.

[2]The likely suggestion that the tribesmen were engaging in contraband smuggling may account for some of the confusions that occur in every retelling of the story of discovery.

In the year 1945,[1] I was tending a flock of fifty-five head in the Wilderness, with two other herdsmen who had also their own flocks. The three of us were sleeping in the Wilderness. As is customary, each one of us would count his flock in the evening; but it happened that for two days I did not count my flock. So about 11 A.M. on the third day, I counted the flock and found that one goat was lost. I came to my companions and told them that I wanted to leave my flock with them and wanted to go out and search for the lost goat. I left them and went in search of the goat. I had to climb hills and go down into valleys. I went very far from the herdsmen. As I was roaming, I came upon a cave with its entrance open at the top like a cistern. Supposing that the goat had fallen into the cave,[2] I started throwing in stones; and every time I threw a stone into the cave, I would hear a sound like the breaking of pottery. Then I was puzzled as to what the sound was, and I wanted to know what was in the cave, so I went down into the cave and found pottery jars. I began to break the jars with my staff, thinking I would find treasure. However, in the first nine jars which I broke, I found little seeds of reddish color, and nothing else was in them. When I broke the tenth jar, which was the smallest of the jars, I found in it some rolled leather with scrawling on it. The nine jars which I had broken first were covered with lids, but were unsealed; whereas the small tenth jar had a lid which was sealed with something like red clay.

I was puzzled as to what I should do, whether to take the rolled leather or to leave it where it was. I finally said, "I will take it," since I remembered that my companions and I needed straps for our sandals. I wrapped up the leather in my cloak and carried it on my back and departed. When I reached my companions, I showed them what I had found and gave each of them a piece of the leather, so that they might use it for their sandal straps.

Through my lack of good fortune, I did not find the goat. Afterward, when the time had become late

[1]Until this account appeared, scholars had assumed that the discovery had occurred in the spring of 1947, the year of the purchase of the scrolls by Sukenik and Mar Athanasius Samuel.

[2]The cave in which the first discovery was made was too high above ground in a cliff too steep for a goat to have entered unaided. Probably the boy's curiosity was the prime motivating factor.

> at night, we returned to the place where we were staying in the Wilderness. I kept the leather with me until I returned to our house, where I put it in a skin bag and hung it up in a corner. The skin bag remained hanging for more than two years. Afterward an uncle of mine came to our house and asked that he might show it to a dealer in antiquities at Bethlehem, to see if it might be of any value.[1]

Tracing the line of ownership of the scrolls would be a long, complex account. Suffice it to say that the largest scroll, plus three others, found its way into the hands of the Syrian Metropolitan of the Monastery of St. Mark in Jerusalem, Mar Athanasius Samuel. This best preserved scroll is the complete book of Isaiah minus a few lacunae. The other scrolls came into the possession of Dr. E. L. Sukenik, professor of archeology at the Hebrew University in Jerusalem. A second, less complete Isaiah scroll of this latter group was found after examination to be textually more similar to the Massoretic Text than was the St. Mark's scroll.

With the news of the finds and the price they had brought, local inhabitants of the Qumran area began scouring the caves. Even after more than a decade, fragments are still being purchased from the tribesmen.

That the initial discoveries and most subsequent explorations were not the work of competent archeologists is unfortunate indeed. The information gained would then have been much more precise and, therefore, more useful in piecing together the story of Qumran.

Contents of the Finds

The people of the Dead Sea Community were a Scripture-centered people. Every book of the Jewish canon is represented in the fragments except Esther.

A survey of the finds will now be given according to the sequence of discovery.[1]

Cave I --Location: About two miles north of Khirbet Qumran in the cliff face.

Date of discovery: 1945 (1947?)

Contents:

I. Texts from the Old Testament
  A. In Hebrew
    1. Scrolls
      a) Isaiah, complete
      b) Isaiah, incomplete: large piece, chapters 38-66 with gaps; small piece, parts of chapters 10, 13, 19-30, 35-40.
    2. Fragments
      a) Genesis
      b) Leviticus (Phoenician script)
      c) Deuteronomy
      d) Judges
      e) Samuel
      f) Daniel
    3. Phylacteries[2]
  B. In Aramaic
    Fragments
      Daniel

II. Non-Canonical Religious Texts
  A. In Hebrew

II. Non-Canonical Religious Texts
A. In Hebrew
Fragments
Jubilees
B. In Aramaic
Liturgical fragments

Cave III--Location: About a mile north of Cave I.

Date of discovery: March, 1952

Contents:

Undetermined fragments
Fragments of Isaiah
Two highly oxidized copper scrolls (originally one work) giving an inventory of the community treasures

Cave IV --Location: About two hundred yards from Khirbet Qumran on the edge of the plateau.

Date of discovery: Summer, 1952

Contents:

Nearly 10,000 fragments have been recovered from this cave. Work of identification is still going on. The most substantial scraps of fragments include the following:

Fragments of Texts from the Old Testament
- a) Deuteronomy (14 MSS)
- b) Numbers
- c) Samuel
- d) Chronicles
- e) Job
- f) Isaiah (12 MSS)
- g) Psalms (10 MSS)
- h) Ecclesiastes

Fragments of Non-Canonical Religious Texts
- a) Jubilees
- b) Testament of Naphtali
- c) Testament of Levi
- d) Tobit (in Aramaic)[1]

Fragments of Texts of the Religious Community
- a) Commentary on Psalms
- b) Commentary on Hosea
- c) Commentary on Isaiah
- d) Commentary on Nahum[2]
- e) Manual of Discipline
- f) The Damascus Document
- g) Hymns
- h) The War Scroll

Some undetermined fragments in the Greek language remain yet to be identified.

[1]This is the first time a version of Tobit has appeared in its probable original language, Aramaic.

[2]This work contains the only explicit historical allusion in the scrolls, referring to Demetrius Eucerus and Alexander Jannaeus. See Theodor H. Gaster, The Dead Sea Scriptures (New York: Doubleday and Co., 1956), pp. 230, 243, 263.

Caves V, VI --Location: Just north of Cave IV.

Date of discovery: Summer, 1952

Contents: A very few fragments

Caves VII--X--Location: In the edge of the plateau above Khirbet Qumran.

Date of discovery: Spring, 1955

Contents: A very few fragments

Cave XI --Location: Two miles north of the Qumran plateau.

Date of discovery: February, 1956

Contents:

II. Non-Biblical Text
In Hebrew
Fragments of an apocalyptic description of the New Jerusalem

In the spring and summer of 1952, caves were explored in the Wadi Murabba'at approximately fifteen miles south of Qumran. Fragments in Hebrew, Greek, Aramaic and Arabic ranging from a seventh century B.C. palimpsest script containing a list of names and numbers to letters and documents left by Bar Kochba's army in A.D. 132-135. New Testament fragments from Matthew, Mark, Luke, John, Acts and Collosians have been found in this area.

Isaiah was by far the most quoted of the prophets: a complete scroll, a fairly complete scroll, and fragments from eleven others have appeared.

The Isaiah Scroll of the St. Mark's Monastery, with which we are mainly concerned, has fifty-four columns. The scroll was originally prepared by sewing together with linen thread seventeen sheets of coarse parchments averaging ten and five-sixteenths inches in width, making a scroll twenty-four feet and five-sixteenths inch long.[1]

In the scroll there are only ten serious lacunae, in addition to about a dozen small holes which in each case affect a few letters. Two extensive tears on the parchment occurred in ancient times and were carefully repaired. The scroll appears to have received much use during the years that it served the Community.

"The Battle of the Scrolls"

Most scholars agree that the majority of the scrolls were the products of a pre-Christian society of Essenes. The agreement is not unanimous, however. Trever and Brownlee at the American Schools of Oriental Research at Jerusalem and W. F. Albright of Johns Hopkins University have unflinchingly proclaimed an early date for the scrolls. The suggested date spans the years from 175 B.C. to 100 B.C., with some evidence of activity at Qumran until the destruction at the monastery in A.D. 68. Jewish patriots about A.D. 132 to 135, during Bar Kochbar's revolt, apparently used the ruins and caves for hiding places, leaving evidence of their occupation of Qumran.

---

[1]Millar Burrows, The Dead Sea Scrolls of St. Mark's Monastery (New Haven: American Schools of Oriental Research, 1950), p. xiv.

The opposition, now very much a minority, is led vigorously by G. R. Driver of Oxford University and Solomon Zeitlin of Dropsie College. These gentlemen propose that the Dead Sea Scrolls are medieval manuscripts, probably dating from the eighth to the tenth century, perhaps of Karaite[1] origin.

Five main assertions of those subscribing to an early dating for the scrolls may be summarized briefly as follows:

1. The paleography of most of the scrolls, in particular the St. Mark's Monastery Isaiah Scroll, is very similar to that of the first century A.D. Nash Papyrus[2] and other documents dating near the beginning of the Christian Era. Paleography is still an inexact science, particularly for semitic languages of the pre-Christian Era, because of the scarcity of data, but its evidence cannot be overlooked.

2. A piece of the linen in which the scrolls were wrapped was sent to the University of Chicago for a Carbon-14 test.[3] This dating method has suggested A.D. 33 plus or minus

[1]The Karaite sect took shape in the eighth century A.D. in Mesopotamia, and quickly spread wherever Jews were located. Karaites were known as "men of the Bible" because they confined themselves to Sacred Scripture, rejecting the traditions of the rabbis as contained in the Talmud. The sect has endured to modern times but now numbers only a few thousand located primarily in the Crimea.

[2]The dating of the Nash Papyrus itself has recently been subject to disputation with W. F. Albright pronouncing it to be a document of the second century B.C.

[3]A Carbon-14 test is effected on the premise that every living organism contains carbon 12 (ordinary) and carbon 14 (radio-two-hundred years, establishing a terminus a quo of 168 B.C. and a terminus ante quem of A.D. 233.

3. The one explicit historical reference, found in the Commentary on Nahum, refers with a 'current events' flavor to an incident which occurred in 88 B.C. We must remember, however, that no one scroll can establish a definitive frame of reference for the dating of any other scroll or even the scrolls in general.

4. The archeological exploration at the site of Qumran has shown that the community flourished for a few centuries before the Christian Era, continuing until the monastery became inoperable due to earthquake damages in A.D. 68. Most of the jars in which the scrolls were discovered were manufactured in the Roman period.

Many coins have been discovered at the cave sites and at Khirbet Qumran. These coins provide specific dates. Vermes categorizes the coin finds as follows:

Date	Number	Remarks
Antiochus VII, 136, 130 129, B.C.	3	Silver
John Hyrcanus, 135-104	14	Some are not quite identified active.) A stable balance between the two kinds of carbon is maintained as long as the organism continues the process of assimilation. When life ceases, however, the quantity of radioactive carbon diminishes progressively because of eradiation. A chemical decompositing may thus testify to the time when assimilation of carbon 14 has stopped through establishing the present relationship between the two elements. The Carbon-14 testing method has not satisfied all the critics and is admitted even by its exponents to be imprecise.

5. The nature of the language is like that of the later Old Testament writings and of Mishnaic Hebrew, supporting a date of the pre-Christian Era and the Tannaitic period up to about the second century A.D.

Five main contentions of those claiming a late date for the scrolls may be summarized as follows:

1. The non-Biblical writings are so very similar to Karaite literature, that their Karaite -- i.e. medieval, origin cannot be denied.

2. Biblical commentary, as in the Commentary on Habakkuk, came into existence as a genre after the period of the Second Temple. The documents cannot therefore be anterior to the storming of Jerusalem in A.D. 70.

[1]Vermes, op. cit., p. 16.

3. Many late words occur. A couple of words in the St. Mark's Isaiah Scroll are not recorded elsewhere before the Middle Ages.[1]

4. The scribe's lack of familiarity with the classical Hebrew idiom suggests a late date. Aramaisms are abundant. The frequent usage of matres lectiones would have been unnecessary if Hebrew had been a living language.

5. Mr. Tovia Wechsler, a Jewish journalist from Jerusalem, noted a scroll among the manuscripts of the St. Mark's Monastery, which he identified as a late Haphtaroth Scroll.[2] Its testimony would have disturbed the hypothesis of the manuscript's antiquity, but the Haphtaroth Scroll has since disappeared.

Five main theories have been advanced as to the period of history out of which the Dead Sea Scrolls emerged:[3]

1. The struggle against Hellenism under Antiochus Epiphanes, 175-164 B.C.

2. The reign of Alexander Janneus, 104-76 B.C.

3. The conquest of Pompey, 63 B.C.

4. First Century A.D.

[2]Prophetical pericopae used in synagogal liturgy.

[3]The theories are elucidated by Vermes, op. cit., p. 64-66. Vermes also cites which scholars support which view.

5. Middle Ages.

Specific dating of the scrolls will determine in large measure the identification of the people who produced them.

The Dead Sea People have been variously identified with

1. the pre-Maccabean Hasidim,
2. some branch of Pharisees in the Hasmonean period,
3. the Essenes,
4. an obscure group called Magharians, or "cave people,"
5. the followers of Zaduk the Pharisee at the destruction of the Temple,
6. the Christian Ebionites,
7. the Karaites.

It is good that a variety of opinions have been expressed and a number of theories of origin have been proposed. The evidence is still too inconclusive for positive identification and description.

The researcher of this thesis has tentatively accepted the early dating. Attempts at identification of the Community, we feel, are in a sense superfluous as the sect probably arose in a time before the distinctions between Pharisees, Sadducees and Essenes had crystallised. The members of the Dead Sea Community probably were a sensitive and conscientious people drawing apart into the desert to seek the God of their fathers and His kingdom.

Theodor Gaster offers sage advice to those who would study the scrolls of Qumran:

The archaeologists tell us that the Dead Sea caves are hot and dark. The same might be said of the controversy which has raged around their contents. At this point, however, it might be healthy to stand back a little from the din and furor and clouds of dust and try to appreciate the scriptures of the Brotherhood simply from the point of view of what they offer to religious thought and insight. They represent an experience which has been repeated often enough in history--the experience of the typical nonconformist who combines, by a strange and wonderful alchemy, an inner quietude with an outer fanaticism, and whose sense of God is a sense of burning fire as well as of radiant light. It may be true that the documents which have come down to us are not great literary masterpieces. Nevertheless they are the testimonies of men who, like their greater forebear, stood in the cleft of a rock and saw the glory of God passing by.[1]

CHAPTER V

THE COMPARISON

Two formats are used to present the data for the study.

With chapters two through fourteen of the Book of Isaiah, five English versions are presented interlineally in the following order:

Book of Mormon
King James Version
Inspired Version
Revised Standard Version
Jewish Publications Society Version

There are two references for every Book of Mormon scripture: the top one refers to the edition published by the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints; the lower reference is to the Reorganized Church edition.

The Hebrew appears next. The top line is the reading of the St. Mark's Isaiah Scroll. The Masseretic Text reading does not appear unless it differs with that of the St. Mark's Scroll. Dashes indicate the absence of a word or phrase from either text.

Notes concerning any peculiarity of the English translations and/or the Hebrew versions appear next. A phenomenon will generally be noted only once, the first time it occurs.

The English version, then the Hebrew versions, and then the notes for each verse is to be considered as a single page. A "page" therefore may be extended through several leaves of paper if necessary.

Many peculiarities of the St. Mark's Isaiah text and of the English versions occur persistently. Because the need for notes decreases as the regularly occurring phenomena are noted, we will change the format for chapter twenty-nine and chapters forty-eight through fifty-four to a simpler arrangement. On one page, the Book of Mormon text and the King James Version text will be presented interlineally. More than one verse per page will be considered where space allows. On the opposite page, the St. Mark's Isaiah text and, where variations occur, the Massoretic Text will be presented to correspond according to versification with the English texts.

Notes will be placed at the end of the whole chapter.

A categorization of the variations of the St. Mark's Isaiah from the Massoretic Text will accompany each chapter.

As our source for the St. Mark's Isaiah text we will use Millar Burrows' The Dead Sea Scrolls of St. Mark's Monastery which presents photographs of each column of the Isaiah Scroll accompanied by Burrows' transliteration in printed Hebrew letters. Where our reading of the scroll may differ decisively from Burrows' transliteration, note will be made.

A dot in the line of the St. Mark's Isaiah text represents a letter which is not clear. Brackets indicate a lacuna in the text. In most cases, the Massoretic Text appears to be sufficient to provide the probable reading when dots or brackets occur.

To check word meanings and occurrences, Gesenius' Lexicon of the Old Testament will be consulted.

The reading of the Septuagint will be noted where it seems to support the reading of the St. Mark's Scroll.

The Vulgate reading is noted on occasion. Because the Vulgate is dated comparatively late, and is based primarily on the Greek version, it is not considered very helpful for exposition of the Hebrew text.

When citing references to passages in the Book of Isaiah, the abreviation "Isa." is often omitted--i.e. Isa. 5:2 will appear as 5:2.

Abreviations that occur regularly are the following:

DSIa	The St. Mark's Monastery Isaiah Scroll
BofM	The Book of Mormon (may refer to either edition)
RBofM	The Reorganised Church edition of the Book of Mormon
KJ	The King James Version
IV	The Inspired Version
RSV	The Revised Standard Version
M.T.	The Massoretic Text
LXX	The Septuagint
m-l	matres-lectionis

The letters of the Hebrew alphabet are now listed according to their present form, the name of the letter, and four examples of how the letter occurs in the St. Mark's Isaiah Scroll.

א	Aleph	א	א	א	א
ב	Beth	ב	ב	ב	ב

At the end of every chapter, the variations of DSIa from the M.T. will be categorized according to the following pattern.

1. Changes of words:

Wherever the DSIa scribe has written a word distinct in meaning from the word in the M.T., notice will be given in the following manner:

vs.-- (DSIa reading,) instead of (M.T. reading)

2. Words or phrases added:

A word or phrase will sometimes occur in DSIa without a counterpart in the M.T.

3. Words or phrases deleted:

A word or phrase will sometimes occur in the M.T. without a counterpart in DSIa.

4. Modifications re. definite article:

added-- in DSIa reading

deleted-- from DSIa reading

5. Modifications re. conjunction:

added-- in DSIa reading

deleted-- from DSIa reading

6. Modifications re. number:

A noun, pronoun, or verb will sometimes be of a singular form in DSIa and plural in the M.T. or vice versa.

7. Modifications re. gender:

A feminine form of a noun, pronoun, or verb will sometimes be employed in DSIa while the masculine counterpart occurs in the M.T., or vice versa.

8. Modifications re. tense or stem:

9. Modifications re. prepositions and particles:

added-- in DSIa reading

deleted-- from DSIa reading

substituted--

, the sign of the definite direct object, is treated as a particle.

10. Orthographical and morphological variations not affecting the meaning of the word in which the variation occurs:

addition of m-l Vav-- deletion of m-l Vav-- addition of m-l Yod-- deletion of m-l Yod-- quiescent letters-- --i.e. some uses of Aleph and He modifications re. suffix-- others--

11. Probable spelling errors:

Sometimes a DSIa reading is placed in this category only because no precedent can be found to justify its spelling. In no case should "certain" be read into "probable."

12. Probable marginal gloss:

Occasionally what appears more likely to be a marginal gloss has been incorporated into the body of the text.

הדבר אשר חזה ישעיה[1] בן אמוץ
ישעיהו

על יהודה וירושלם[2]
וירושלם

1. The scribe of 1QIa often uses the shorter form (-yah) of theophoric names where the M.T. employs the longer form (-yahu). According to Vermes[3], use of the shorter form developed after the Babylonian Exile.

2. Both ירושלם (sixteen times) and ירושלם (nine times) are found in 1QIa. In the M.T. the defective form is the more usual, but the Massoretes have placed a Hireq at the lower right tip of the Mem suggesting it be pronounced as if the Yod were present.

והיה באחרית הימים נכון יהיה הר בית יהוה

[1]בראש [2]הרים ונשא מגבעות ונהרו [3]עליו [4]כל [5]הגואים
ההרים אליו כל הגוים

1. RSV and JPS seem to assume a Caph (כראש) rather than a Beth (בראש). The DSIa scroll appears to have a Beth, but it could possibly be a Caph.

2. Omission of the definate article produces a closer parallelism with מגבעות which the Massoretes point as being indefinate.

3. עליו is here used, which according to Gesenius, corresponds to Greek ἐπί. 2:2 of the LXX reads

. . . καὶ ἥξουσιν ἐπ' αὐτὸ πάντα τὰ ἔθνη,

whereas Micah 4:2 reads

. . . καὶ σπεύσουσιν προς αὐτο λαοί,

perhaps suggesting those translating into Greek had עליו in their Isaiah Vorlage and אליו in Micah. This is just "academic speculation," however. As for עלוהי, this may perhaps be explained by noting that while Vav and Yod have forms distinct from one another in DSIa, they seem to be used quite interchangeably.[6]

4. Before vowel signs had been introduced into written Hebrew, certain consonants were used to do double duty, --i.e.

(a) to convey their own consonantal sound,

(b) to represent a vowel sound.

The letters so used were Vav, Yod, and occasionally He and Aleph. These are called Matres lectionis or אמות הקראים. The Vav is וֹ, generally written וֹ֫ by the Massoretes, tells us that a long o is to be sounded.

5. The Aleph usually occurs in this word as a medial consonant recalling the Arabic hamza. It is not clear whether it is present for pronunciation purposes or is merely graphic.

אל הר יהוה

אל בית אלוהי יעקוב[2] וירונו מדרכיו[3] ונאלכה באורחתין
אלהי יעקב וירנן ונלכה בארחתין

1. Omission of the phrase, "to the mountain of the LORD", is possibly an example of homoioarchton.

2. May be a peculiarity of dialect, or perhaps a simple error, with the scribe intending to write וַיֹּרֵנוּ.

3. The verb being הלך, this form appears to be a good example of an Aleph replacing a He. Apparently, by the time of DSIa, the Aleph had become completely quiescent.

כִּי מִצִּיּוֹן תֵּצֵא תּוֹרָה[1] וּדְבַר יְהוָה מִירוּשָׁלִָם[2].

1. The metathetic Aleph appears regularly in 0SIa to terminate some words usually written without an Aleph, --e.g., כי, מי, על. The scribe is not consistent, however; for example, 5:5 has both כי and אכי.

2. The conjunction seems to have been omitted. If so, "and" should likewise be omitted in an English translation. A crack in the parchment, however, may have obliterated the Vav, as Burrows indicates by placing the dot before the Daleth.

1. ה may be a marginal marking, as its position on the manuscript is at the far left of the column. If the first letter is meant to be a Yod, as may well be the case, we have יה, which is abbreviated from the Divine Name יהוה. Perhaps the scribe wanted to emphasize by a gloss that the LORD himself is the one who will judge among the nations.

2. The stroke through this error indicates that the strict rabbinic standards for scribal activities were not yet in effect, at least, not with the scribe of 1QIa.

3. את is the sign of the definate, direct object, and contributes nothing to the English rendition of the sentence.

4. Conjunction added -- ". . . and nation shall not lift up sword . . ." LXX has the conjunction Καὶ.

1. With the conjunction added, it will read "And the lofty looks . . ." LXX has γαρ , --i.e. "for."

2. The change of tense of both verbs from perfect to imperfect is in agreement with the English translations and with the LXX, καὶ ταπεινωθήσεται ... καὶ ὑψωθήσεται,

תשפלנה is now more accurately in agreement with its subject עינ (fem., plural) with regard to number and gender. ונישח is probably an example of the scribe's tendency to avoid the Vav-consecutive construction.

1. The Codex Alexandrinus[4] has the verb in the singular, thereby agreeing with the BofM and IV.

2. A lacuna in the manuscript obscures this word or phrase. This is the only lacuna of DSIa that we can not fill in by the M.T.

3. Gesenius considers the dividing of לחפרפרות to be erroneous. Note the masculine termination in DSIa.

[4]The Codex Alexandrinus, now possessed by the British Museum, is a vellum uncial manuscript of most of the Old and New Testament, written probably in the first half of the fifth century.

1. Pronominal suffixes of the second masculine singular and the second and third person plural usually possess a terminal He, reading כה, כמו, כנו

Mansoor[2] and Arbez[3] read these endings as -ka, -komma, -homma, -henna, -henna, noting that the Samaritan dialect to this day has preserved the same pronunciation though not the same written form. In any event it is clear from DSIa that there existed a different pronunciation and form from those preserved in the M.T.

1. The He of מחסיר may be a vocalic letter, or it may represent a pure type of Hiphil participle before elision of the He has occurred.

2. Note the use of the defective form, revealing a basic inconsistency on the part of the scribe.

1. First Edition also had "honourable" and "counsellor."

2. Working on the assumption that a Holem or Qibbus sound will nearly always be designated by the presence of a m-l Vav in DSIa, forms such as יועל and יעלו have been critically examined by some scholars to see if a meaning that would not require an o or u sound can be wrung from them. Perhaps the fact that the LXX reads θαυμαστὸν συμβουλον, --i.e. "wonderful counsellor" and that the Aramaic יפי, easily confused with Hebrew יפע, means "wonder" might be connected. We would probably be safer, however, to follow the tradition of the Massoretes.

1. The presence of the conjunction Vav would cause the sentence to read, "And he shall swear in that day . . ." LXX has Καὶ .

2. שלמה may be an example of an erroneous transposition of letters, or it may be related to the root שלם meaning "wholeness," "soundness," therefore "safety."

כי כשלה ירושלם[2] ויהודה נפלה כי[1] לשונם
ירושלם נפל

ומעלליהם[3] על יהוה למרות[4] עיני כבודו
אל עני

1. The BofM addition of "s" to "tongue" does not need to presuppose a different Hebrew text. The King James translators are not consistent: in Ps. 55:9, Ps. 78:36, and Jer. 23:31, this same word לשון is translated in the plural. LXX has plural γλωσσαι.

2. Judah, here being the name of a nation, is considered feminine, hence the feminine form of the verb.

3. While בא instead of את may represent a confusion of gutterals, it is quite possible that the scribe actually intended the preposition בא. In any case the English translation will not be affected.

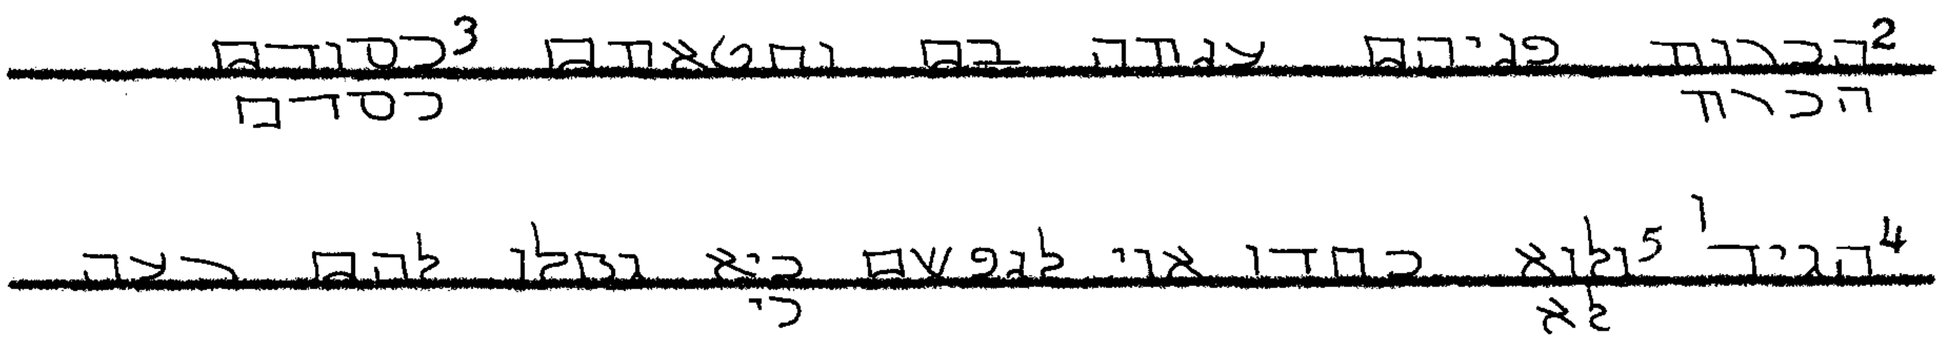

4. עירי with two Yod's is the more common form of the plural construct of עיר.

for	they	have	rewarded	evil	unto themselves.
for	they	have	rewarded	evil	unto themselves.
For	they	have	brought	evil	upon themselves.
For	they	have	wrought	evil	unto themselves.

1. "shew" in the First Edition and in the KBofM.

2. The M.T. form הַכָּרַת seems to be a verbal of the Hiphal of נכר, meaning "a knowing," or "a taking knowledge of." The presence of the Vav in DSIa הכרות is confusing, but perhaps merely portrays a dialectical peculiarity.

3. סודם with the m-l Vav, appears in DSIa also in 1:9,10 and 13:19, assuring us that the placement of the vocalic Vav is not an error. LXX reads Σόδομα and the Vulgate gives us Sodoma , both of which support the DSIa pronunciation against the Massoretic.

4. The supralineal Vav may be a marginal mark or it may represent a pluralization of the verb. If the latter, the clause would now read, "and they have made known their sin as Sodom."

5. The addition of the conjunction Vav in DSIa agrees with the KBofM. LXX has Καὶ .

for the reward of his hands shall be given him.

for the reward of their hands shall be upon them.

for what his hands have done shall be done to him.

for the work of his hands shall be done to him.

אוי לרשע רע כי גמול [1]ידו [2]ישוב לו
כי ידין יעשה

1. ידו may be the singular form of the noun, requiring the translation, "his hand," or it may be the case that the single Vav is an acceptable form in DSIa for the third person masculine singular of pronominal suffixes with plural nouns, in the same way that יָדוֹ has been used seventeen times in the M.T. for the more frequent form יָדָיו.

2. The clause now reads, "for the reward (work) of his hand(s) shall not return."

1. "which" in First Edition.

2. וגגו, as ידו in vs. 11, may be either singular or plural.

3. In משרידך the Aleph has either been elided or unwittingly dropped. By DSIa's time it seems that gutterals were pronounced weakly or not at all. The scribe probably wrote משרידך as he heard it in his mind, and not as he saw it on the parchment from which he was copying.

4. Burrows transliterates דרך at this point. The first consonant is not clear, but may just as readily be read as Vav or Yod.

נאם אדני יהוה צבאות

1. The JPS reads יהוה as "the LORD" even when the Massoretes have pointed it to be read אֱלֹהִים("God").

2. While the Ketib ("it is written") of the M.T. is מלכם the Qere ("to be read") is מה לכם.

3. DSIa suggests that we read num or no'em rather than the M.T. ne'um. Perhaps rather than a passive participle construct, the scribe intends us to read it נְאֻם, as a noun of which the meaning is dictio in the sense of dictum. On the other hand, the scribe may simply have lost the original sense of form.

1. The Qere for the M.T. reads נטורות.

2. If טפף should be parallel to הלוך in form, as it seems, we probably have here an erroneous transposition of letters, with טופף intending to read טפוף.

3. The masculine pronominal suffix of the M.T. form is replaced by the feminine suffix, which is more accurate in this instance.

1. This use of a series of dots may indicate doubt about the reliability of the passage, or an error in the scribe's copy-work. The word superinscribed over the error may be the scribe's attempt at correction, a marginal explanation, or the indication of a variant tradition. In 11:4 a series of dots both beneath and above two words seem to indicate that they have been misplaced.

ביום ההוא יסיר אדוני[1] יהוה את תפארת[2] העכיסים

והשבישים והשהרנים[3]

1. יהוה above the Tetragrammaton may be an example of a fairly frequent phenomenon: the correction of 0SIa towards the reading of the M.T.

2. The terminal Mem is placed above because of lack of space at the end of the line.

3. Substitution of one sibilant for another, a fairly frequent happening, may be considered a spelling error.

1. The verb has changed its tense, now being a true imperfect avoiding the Vav-consecutive, and also its number, now plural. The sentence should now be read as does the RSV.

2. While Burrows transliterates this as חחח, a crack in the scroll makes it impossible to say whether or not a Vav is present.

3. Addition of the definate article would cause to read "Instead of the sweet spices . . ." Perhaps the lack of a m-l Vav suggests that the pronunciation be

בֶּעֱם (as M.T. Ex. 30:23)
or בֶּעֱם (as M.T. Cant. 5:1)

Arabic بَشَامٌ is pronounced basamun.

4. יהיה is no longer needed if the first verb of the sentence is interpreted as indicated in Note 1 of this page.

5. According to Gesenius, והחוד is an Aramaic preposition. Note that both והחוד and החד, the ordinary Hebrew form, are used within a few words of each other.

6. The RSV has adopted the DSIa reading.

1. While it is not infrequent for a singular verb to appear with a plural subject, as DSIa reads, the M.T. form is the preferred reading.

2. This same variation occurred in 3:7. The transposition of the Mem and the Lamed is probably a spelling error.

1. The M.T. reads תֵּעָה. DSIa, lacking a m=1 Vav, perhaps suggests תֵּעָף which is found in Deut. 23:14 and Ezra 4:12. No change in meaning is involved.

2. Burrows transliterates as ברעם, but the third consonant seems clearly to be a Pe.

1. The MSV considers of the M.T. vs. 6 to be part of this sentence.

2. Probably another attempt to avoid the Vav-consecutive construction.

3. The last ten words of M.T. vs. 5 and the first four of vs. 6 are omitted. After the scribe wrote , his eye apparently jumped to the same word on the line below and he continued writing from there. This is a case of homoioleuton. Vs. 5 and vs. 6 of DSIa now read,

אשירה[1] נא -- לידידי שירת דודי לכרמו כרם

[2] היה היתה לידידי בקרן בן שמן

1. The omission of the particle, אנא , which particle denotes modest request, will not affect the translation of the sentence.

2. Probably another example of the addition of a quiescent Aleph, recalling, as Arbez[3] points out, the practice observed in the Babylonian manuscripts of the Mishna.

ועתה [1]יושבי ירושלם ואיש יהודה [2]שפטו נא בין

יושב שפטו נא

1. DSIa's plural form יושבי is in agreement with the LXX οἱ ἐνοικοῦντες and with the English translations.

2. Retention of the vowel with the second radical of the masculine plural perfect has been noted previously. The substitution of Aleph for He and vice versa occurs frequently.

מה לעשות עוד [2]בכרמי ולוא עשיתי בו מדוע
לכרמי ולא

קויתי לעשות ענבים [3]ויעש באושים
ויעש באשים

1. The BofM and IV read as indicative mood rather than interrogative: in this the LXX accords, reading, ...διότι ἐμεινα τοῦ ποιῆσαι σταφ υλήν, ἐποίησεν δὲ ἀκάνθας.

2. Change of preposition does not affect the sense of the sentence, which now reads, "What more was there to do in my vineyard that I have not done in it."

3. The scribe probably intended לעשה.

ואתה[1] אודיע[2] נא אתכם את אשר אנכי
ועתה אודיעה אחכם

עושא לכרתי[3] אסיר משוכתו ויהי בער
עשה הסר והיה לבער

פרא גדרו[4] ויהי לחרפה
והיה

1. Probably a confusion of gutterals. It could be considered as the imperative of אחה "to come" except that the plural form of the pronoun which occurs three words later would require the plural form אתו.

2. אודיע is an acceptable form. The terminal He for emphasis or cohortative force is not required.

3. אסיר of DSIa is the express form that the English translators have interpreted the infinitive הסר to mean. LXX has ἀφελῶ, "I will take away."

4. ויהיה, avoiding the Vav-consecutive, is probably a step towards modern Hebrew.

כי כרם יהוה צבאות בית ישראל ואיש

יהודה נטע [1]שעשועיו ויקו למשפט והנה

[2]למשפח לצדקה והנה צעקה

1. שעשועים appears in the Scriptures only in the plural, as in Prov. 8:30, Ps. 119:24, Jer. 31:20, indicating probably that ו- is an acceptable form for the plural in DSIa.

2. In view of the parallelism with the next phrase, inclusion of the Lamed on למשפח is probably an error.

הגי[1] חגיתי בית בית[2] שדה בשדה יקריבו עד
חגיעי בביח

אפס מקום וישתם[3] בדדכם[4] בקרב הארץ
והושבתם לבדכם

1. The scribe occasionally confuses Ayin (ע) and Tsade (צ).

2. בית often suffices for בבית in the M.T. itself. In this instance, however, בבית is the preferred reading.

3. הושבתם, the Hophal form of ישב, is used nowhere else in the Bible. DSIa appears to use the Qal form with Beth erroneously omitted. If וישבתם is intended, the clause reads, "and you dwell alone in the midst of the land."

4. לבדכם needs the Lamed. A slight crack in the parchment, where the Lamed should be, may be responsible for its deletion.

1. "Horner" in the First Edition, probably a printer's error.

2. We have here the masculine form אחד replacing the feminine אחת. Gesenius lists בד as being a common gender noun. The regular plural בדים has masculine form.

1. For the etymology of צר, Gesenius indicates צרר "to straighten, to press upon." A noun צר, derived from the verb צרר, means "stone, pebble, rock." The LXX here reads ὡς στερεὰ πέτρα "as solid rock."

1. Burrows transliterates ושאג to correspond to the Ketib of the M.T. The first consonant, however, has a very distinct hook and is shorter than the usual Vav. A Yod is more likely. As שאג it agrees with the M.T. Qere.

2. With the conjunction displaced from ינהם to ככפירים, the verse may now be rendered,

> The roaring is theirs: like a lion they shall roar, and like young lions they shall growl . . .

3. Burrows has transliterated this as וירח. Close scrutiny reveals the semblance of a stroke (Zayin) to the left of the word, barely visible because of a crease in the parchment. The mark that Burrows interprets as a Zayin is rather thick, and is probably the blotting out of an incorrect letter with the correct Aleph placed above the line. If these observations are valid, the DSIa reproduces the same reading as the M.T.

1. "understand" in the First Edition.

2. Probably an erroneous confusion of gutterals.

3. Omitting the conjunction, it now reads, "Hear, hear, but do not understand: see, see, but do not perceive."

1. The First Edition reads as does the KJ.

2. Probably a spelling error.

3. The plural form is found in the LXX ἀκουσωσι and in the English translations. DSIa perpetuates the singular form שמע, three words before, however.

4. The preposition ב on לבבו provides a closer parallelism with בעינין and ובאזנין.

standing when it is felled." The holy seed when they cast of their leaves; so the holy seed shall be the substance thereof.

shall be the substance thereof.

shall be the substance thereof.

is its stump.

shall be the stock thereof.'

1. The First Edition and the RBofM have retained "in it."

2. First clause of the RBofM reads as does the IV.

3. The hapax legomenon בשלכת of the M.T. gives way to the Hophal particle מושלכת (found also in Jer. 36:30).

4. מצבת meaning "stump" has same form as the construct of מצבה meaning "sacred column." מצבה may have absolute ending in Tau, as in II Sam. 18:18.

5. במה may be interpreted as "high place" --i.e. heathen altar.

6. Textual critics consider these last three words to be a late addition which has been inserted to relieve the severity of the message. It is not present in the LXX.

DSIa may now be read,

> And the still being a tenth in it, it in turn shall be for burning, as the oak and the terebinth when the sacred column of a heathen altar is over-thrown. A seed of the holy one is its sacred column.

If we allow the last clause to be, as is agreed among textual critics, a late insertion due to the misunderstanding of the meaning of מצבת, we may here see a reference to the historical destruction of "high places" or heathen altars as illustrative of the forth-coming national calamity. II Kings 18:4 and II Chron. 30:14; 31:1 tell of Hezekiah's destruction of the "high places."

This verse in the LXX reads, καὶ ἔτι ἐπ' αὐτῆς ἐστιν τὸ ἐπιδέκατον, καὶ πάλιν ἔσται εἰς προνομὴν ὡς τερε-βινθος καὶ ὡς βάλανος ὅταν ἐκπεσῃ ἀπὸ τῆς θηκης αὐτῆς

which may be translated,

> And still upon it is the tenth part, and > again it shall be for plunder; as a terebinth, and > as an oak, when it is torn from its place.

1. "and" in the First Edition.

2. The DSIa scribe differs from the M.T. in his pronunciation of this name. Here and in DSIa 7:5,9, and 8:6, a m-l Vav is employed. Vav is omitted in 7:4. LXX has an o sound, (υἱος) Ρομελιου, and the Vulgate reads (filius) Romeliae.

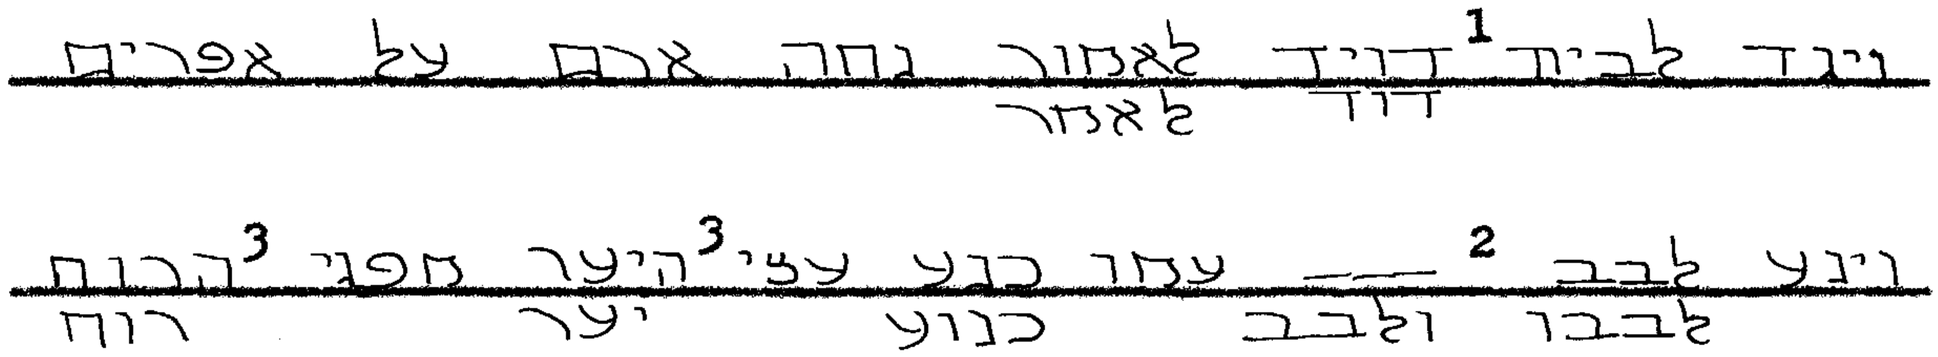

3. The plural form יכלו corresponds to LXX ἠδυνήθησαν and Vulgate poterit. The RSV also translates as plural.

1. ד'ד'ד with a Yod occurs also in the M.T., especially in Chronicles, Ezra, Nehemiah, and Zechariah.

2. DSIa omits "his heart," thereby reading simply, ". . . and the heart of his people was moved . . ."

3. The English translations assume the definate article.

1. The definate article is found also in the LXX της γης.

2. The repetition of החרן והאזרח may not have been in the text used as Vorlage by the DSIa scribe, or, if it was, was probably interpreted by the scribe to be unnecessary dittography, and consequently was omitted.

1. If a Caph is intended, a translation may read, "Thus the LORD spoke to me. Like a strong hand he instructed me . . ." The Caph is often indistinguishable from the Beth. As in the M.T., a Beth may be intended.

2. The LXX also omitted the conjunction, causing --i.e. "with the strong hand" to be read with the following clause.

1. Burrows transliterates וְהִיא, but there is clearly a mark above and between the Vav and the He. Ignoring the metathetic Aleph, we now have the regular form of the Qal imperfect tense. No change in the English is required.

2. צוּר, with a Pathah, may be used for "stone."

1 הנה אנכי והילדים אשר נתן לי יהוה לאותות

2 ולמופת בישראל מעם יהוה לבאות השכן בהר ציון

1. This is a curious form. If it is intended to be something other than הִנֵּה, it could possibly be אֲנָה, the Aramaic pronoun "I." אֲנָה is found in Dan. 2:23. If such is the case, the English would read, "I, even I, and the children whom the LORD has given me . . ."

2. Both nouns are now singular, "a sign and a wonder."

1. The single Vav is probably an acceptable form of the more usual plural suffix יִן־. Otherwise, we have here a very rare use of the singular form אֱלוֹהַּ.

2. The omission of the definate article need not affect the English translation. חַיִּים may, however, be construed to be the abstract noun "life" with the English now reading, "Should not a people seek unto their God, for life (to be given) unto the dead?"

והתקצף ובאלהין

1. The addition of the conjunction may cause the sentence to read, "And they (the people) shall pass through it and shall be harshly oppressed and hungry . . ." One wonders if --ו--ו might in this case be similar to the Latin construction et-- et--, --i.e. "both . . . and . . ."

2. The imperfect form יתקצף is equivalent in force to the Vav-consecutive construction ויתקצף.

1. The English versions have been translated as if the definate article were present in the M.T. The LXX reads with the article, (ἐπὶ) τὴν γῆν.

2. The m-l Vav in חשוכה would suggest a pronunciation akin to the Aramaic חֲשׁוֹךְ "darkness" found in Dan. 2:22.

1. Note the versification differences. The DofN, KJ, IV and NSV include this verse in Chapter 9.

2. "at the first" in the First Edition.

3. Probably a spelling error.

4. This word is difficult to read because of a crease in the parchment. It appears to be more similar to תעוף found in the preceding verse than to תועף of the M.T. An interpretation based on the reading כילא תעופף can be imagined, but is less clear than the M.T. reading, which is obscure enough already.

1. The Qere is לֹו "to him." The English versions, except the KJ, accept the Qere reading, which is supported by c. 20 mss. and the LXX. 1QIsa supports the Ketib of the M.T.

1. The M.T. reads סִבְּכָה. Perhaps 1QIsa by the lack of a m-l Vav suggests סִבָּכָה as found in 1 Kings 11:28, Ps. 81.7, and Neh. 4:11. No change of meaning would result.

2. The conjunction Vav, here separating the verb from its objects, seems superfluous.

3. 1QIsa חדים corresponds consonantally with LXX Μαδιαμ.

1. The DSIa scribe has preserved a form of this noun, the pronunciation of which is lost to us. This same word is written in vs. 6 המשרה as in the M.T. A smudged mark above the Resh, however, possibly a Vav, is intended as a correction.

1. כסה appears in Job 26:9 and I Kings 10:19.

2. The pronominal suffix suggests that the antecedent is a masculine noun, perhaps כסה דוד.

1. May be a spelling error: Resh and Daleth are sometimes difficult to distinguish. Or possibly רגז "to tremble" may be intended, in which case the verse would read, "And all the people shall tremble, even Ephraim . . . " LXX reads γνώσονται supporting the M.T. reading.

1. The lack of an m-l Vav may possibly indicate that, instead of a Pual form וְיַכְרְתוּ, a Qal or Piel imperative form is intended, in which case the sentence would read " . . . cut down sycamores, and we will put cedars in their place." The LXX has ἐκκοψωμεν, "let us cut down."

1. "is" was omitted in the First Edition.

2. The addition of the conjunction will cause to read "And for all this his anger . . . "

3. This word is very blurred in the text. It appears that the scribe attempted to write a form similar to the masculine pronoun זה.

4. Though BSIa furnishes a form that would regularly be plural, the accompanying participle is singular.

1. Substitution of the preposition עד for על does not necessarily affect the English translation. But על may also be translated "against," in which case we may read, "And the people did not turn against him who smote them . . . " If המכהו is interpreted to refer to the LORD, however, this latter rendition is inappropriate.

1. Instead of the preposition ב, implying means or instrumentality, the preposition מן is employed, implying cause. The English will now read "Because of the wrath of the LORD of hosts . . ." This rendition accords with the LXX διὰ θυμὸν .

2. Apparently a simple spelling error of the transposition of letters.

3. The definite article is present in the English translations.

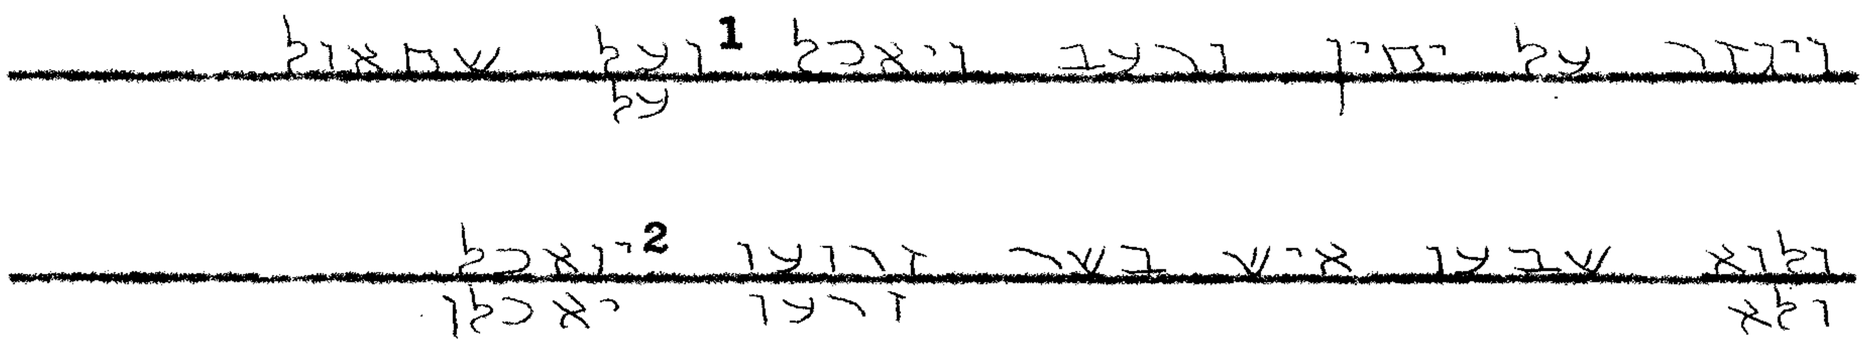

4. Although העם "the people" has a singular form, it often takes a plural verb in the M.T. and elsewhere.

1. עיר, appearing in the M.T., is the Piel perfect of עור. ויעי , appearing in DSIa, seems to be the Hiphil imperfect of the same verb עור. Both stems, Hiphil and Piel have the same force.

ויעיר may be translated "and he shall stir up" if we consider it to be a simple imperfect rather than the Vav-consecutive construction.

עברו מעברה

הרמה גבעת שאול נסה

1. 1QIsa has the verb in the singular, "he has crossed over," to agree with the LXX παρελευσεται. The M.T. in vs. 28 has been talking in terms of a third person masculine singular subject and makes a sudden switch to the plural for this verse, seemingly without reason. 1QIsa makes no such transition.

2. The preposition -ל, "in, into," would cause to read, "he is crossed over into the pass."

1. The English translations have supplied the definite article.

2. The row of dots above and below probably indicate the misplacement of these words at this point. A few words later יומת רשע is repeated in its proper context.

3. יומת appears to be Hophal imperfect. The clause now reads, "and with the breath of his lips the wicked shall be slain."

1. Burrows transliterates יחדו, which is easy to deal with. When transcribing יחד we should keep in mind that the Yod and the Vav are sometimes used interchangeably in DSIa. The M.T. reading is preferable to any verbal meaning that can be wrung from יחד.

BoM	(2N21:7) (2N9:122)	And the cow and the bear shall feed; their young ones shall lie down together; and the lion shall eat straw like the ox.

1. פלשתים, with the double Yod, is also found in Amos 9:7.

2. Although the third person plural imperfect of this Double "Ayin" verb is regularly יָבֹזּוּ, the DSIa scribe has written the full form. The infinitive is בזז.

1. Gesenius lists עִיִּם as a hapax legonenon, taken from an obsolete root עוּם possibly meaning "to terrify." עִיִּם is found in the M.T. as the name of a city of Judah in Num. 33:45 and Josh. 15:29. This form Gesenius traces back to the Piel of עוּה meaning "to overturn, to destroy." LXX reads πνεύματι βιαίῳ "with a mighty wind."

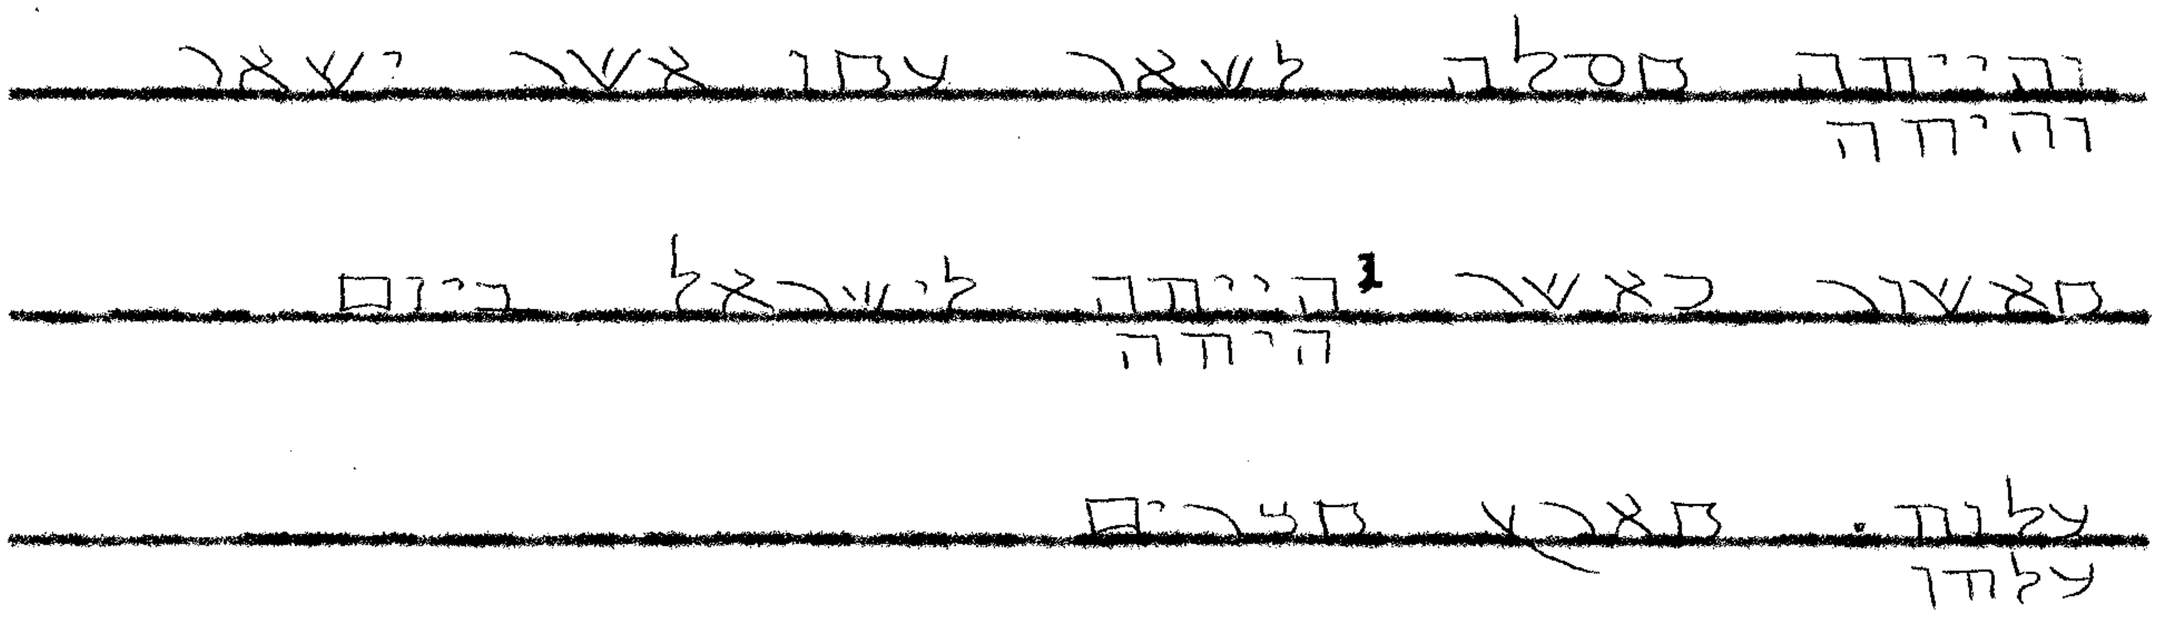

2. The pronominal possessive suffix "his" is now omitted.

1. The double Yod in יהיתה occurs too frequently in DSIa to be an unintentional error, but rather must be considered a peculiarity of the scribe's orthography.

1. "is" in the First Edition and RSofM.

2. While this could possibly be an example of unintentional dittography, כי could be intended as a preposition. The preposition כי accompanies the verb בטח in Jer. 7:4. If כי is meant as a preposition, the verse will begin, "Behold, in God my salvation I will trust . . ."

3. The scribe apparently first wrote, כי עזי וזמרת יהוה "for the LORD is my strength and my song." The supralineal He seems to be a "correction" towards the reading of the M.T.

4. The conjunction has been omitted and a perfect, rather than imperfect tense has been employed.

1. The preposition ל needs to be understood even if not written.

2. Burrows transliterates תועדים with a Yod as the second letter. A Vav is more likely, however, which would draw the DSIa form closer to the M.T. Qere תעדים. The apparent plural ending of תועדים may be a dialectical peculiarity as the subject תעוד is a singular form.

1. The substitution of Gimel for Caph is probably due to a confusion of palatals.

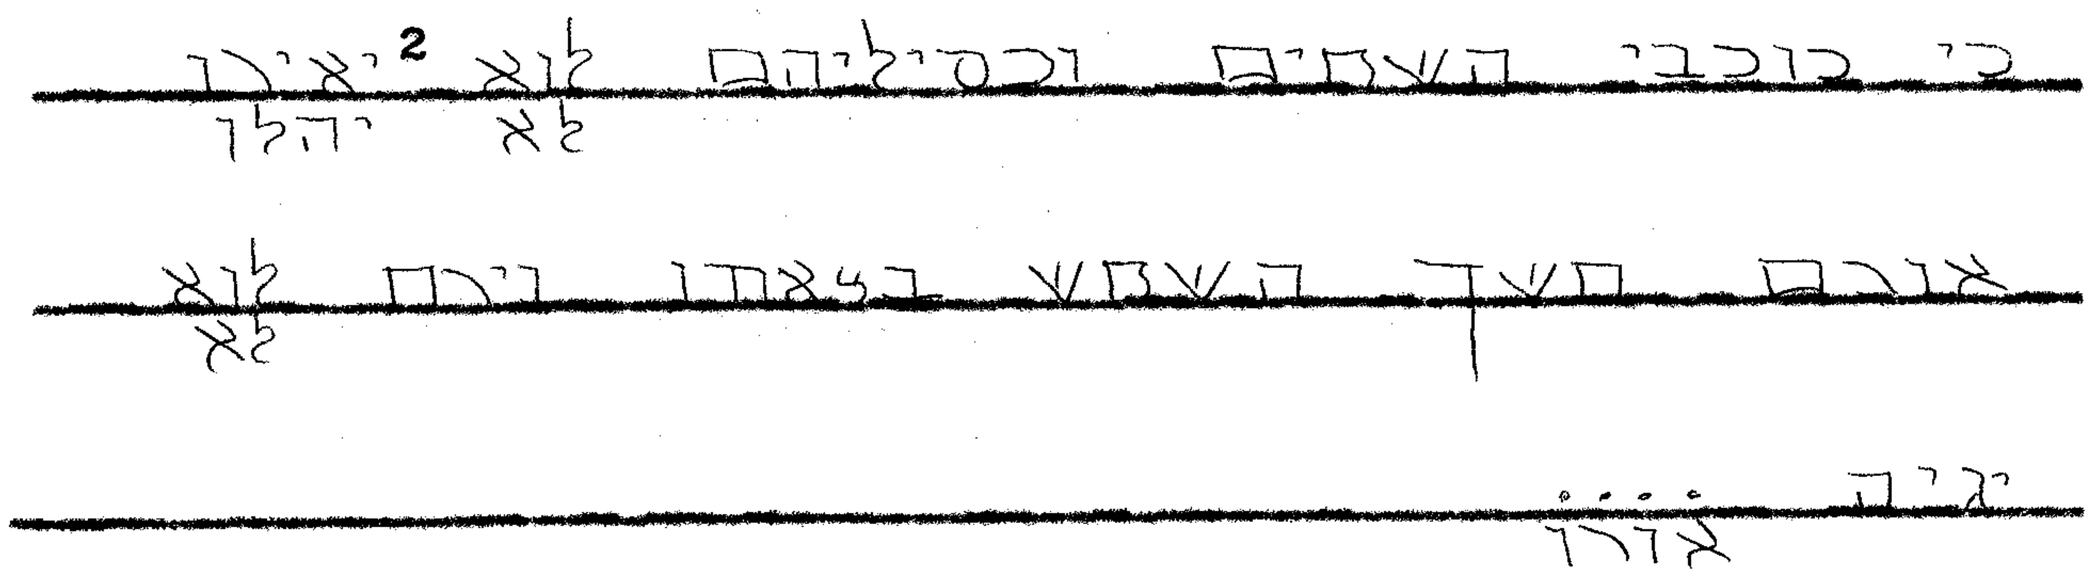

2. The deletion of the possessive pronominal suffix, now causes to read "sinners" rather than "its sinners" or "the sinners thereof." LXX reads τους ἁμαρτωλους "the sinners."

1. Burrows transliterates as וערלולהחה.

2. The conjunction is added, now reading, "• • • and their house will be plundered • • •"

3. The Qere for the M.T. is והשכבה, considered a milder term than the Ketib והשגלה. DSIa appears to agree with the Qere rather than the Ketib. Both may be translated "shall be ravaged, shall be lain with."

1. RSV reads "Chaldee's."

2. The lack of a Vav could indicate a singular noun in the construct, in which case the English might read, "And glorious Babylon, the Kingdom of beauty, the pride of the Chaldeans, shall be . . ."

3. Probably a simple error of the improper transposition of letters.

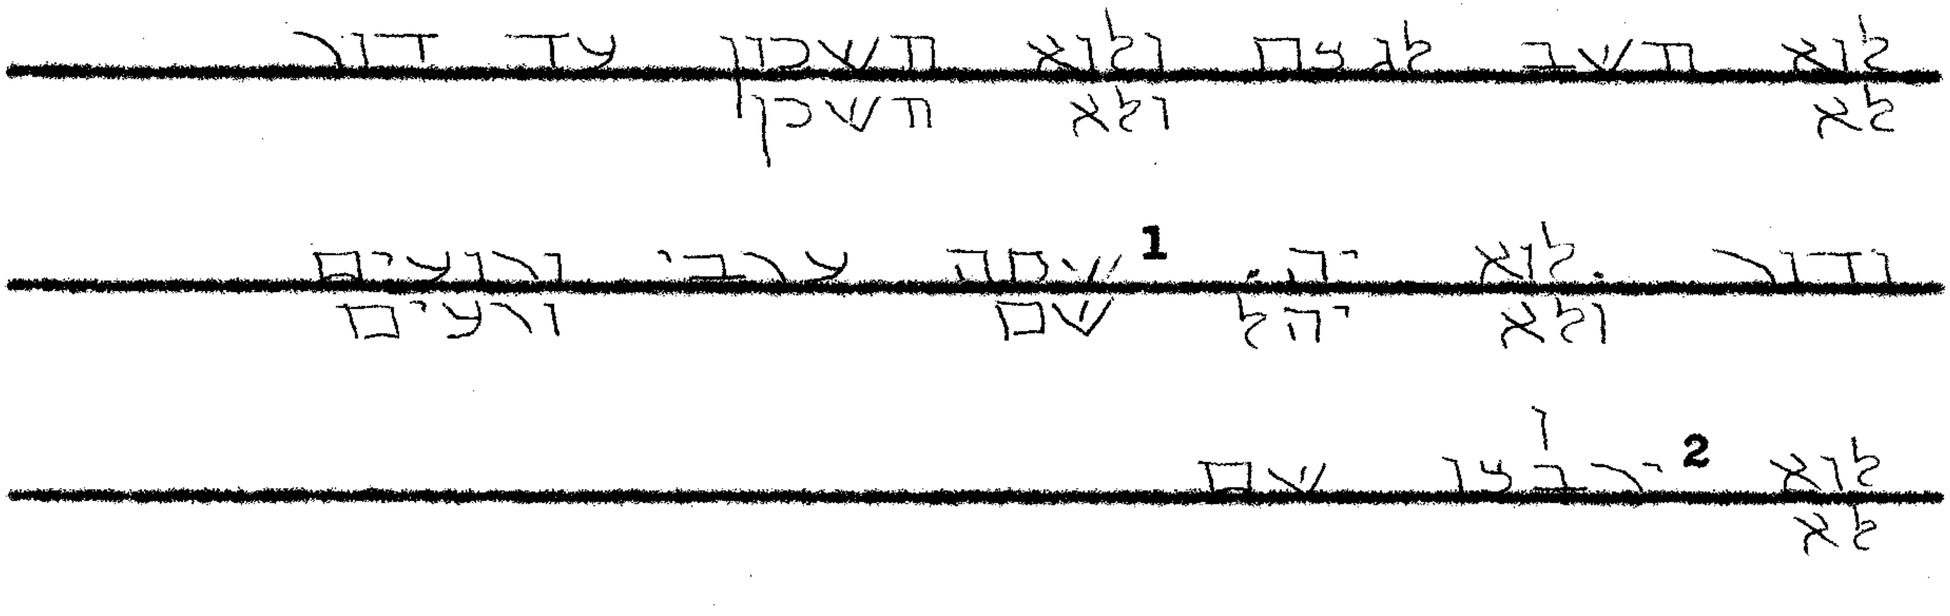

4. כשדים, like כלשדים is an acceptable plural form.

ונשאתה[1] את המשל הזה על מלך בבל

ואמרתה איכה[2] שבת נגש שבתה[3] מרהבה
ואמרת איך שבת נגש מדהבה

1. The addition of the sign of the definite object does not affect the English translation.

2. שב probably was שבו at one time in the scroll's history. The scroll has been torn and then sewed up, with the stitch located where the Tau might once have been.

3. DSIa reads מרהבה "oppression, violent fury" from רהב "to rage, to be fierce." The exclamation now reads, "How the oppressor has ceased, the violent fury (oppression) has ceased!" מרהבה is closer in meaning to the LXX ὲπισπουδαστης "the oppressor."

לבנון

עבדה[2] ועלה[3] יעלה הכורת עלינו

שכב ז

1. Gesenius states that לבנון always takes the definite article with prose, and stands without the article in poetry. The 1QIsa scribe does not follow this rule.

2. A meaning for the sentence is possible accepting שבתה "thou hast returned" as the intended text; but it appears that the tear in the parchment has obliterated a letter between the Beth and the Tau. The reading would probably be identical with the M.T. if fully restored.

3. The added conjunction is superfluous here, and need not be carried over into the English translation.

1. The form would be more complete if written לקראתך or לקרתך.

2. The participles עורה and הקימה are both feminine forms, treating their subject שאול as feminine.

1. The lack of a m-l Vav possibly suggests a Qal form instead of the M.T. Pual pointing, which is hapax legomenon. The meaning will be substantially the same.

1. The presence of the Tau suggests נבלה "folly, wickedness, shameful deed." הדיה נבלתך may now be translated "the noise of your folly."

2. The deletion of the Yod might suggest a singular form, corresponding to the singular form of the LXX τὸ κατακάλυμμα σου "thy covering."

1. The BotH accepts the Latin lucifer "light bearer."

2. There might be a terminal He on הילך that has been obscured by the tear in the parchment.

3. Burrows' transliteration reads ש'מעוים but this must be a typographical error. The final consonant can only be a Mem.

4. The singular form "a nation" is employed.

1. The Qames-Hatuph (short -o- sound) as well as Holem and Qibbus are represented in DSIa by a m-l Vav, as in the Hophal form הושלכתה .

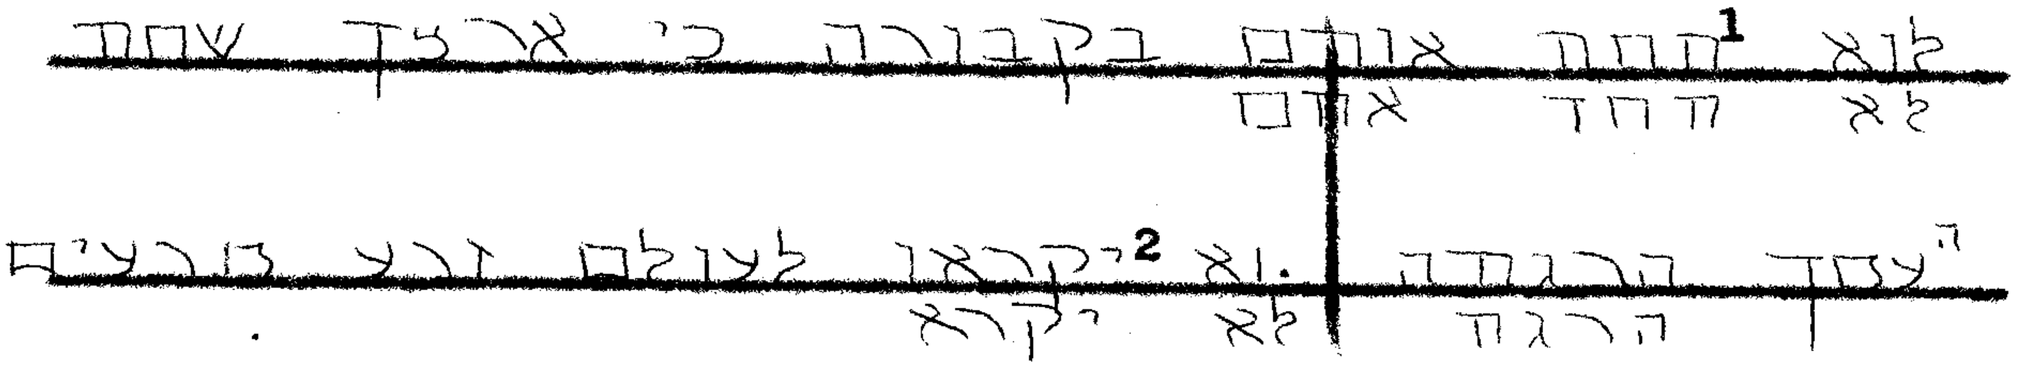

2. The presence of the m-l Vav in תקוברך suggests a pronunciation unknown to us. Possibly it could be a Qal active participle, in which case, the verse would begin, "But you are cast forth away from him who shall bury you . . ."

וטאטאתי[1] לטורש[2] קפד ואגמי מים ושמתיה

בטאטא השמד נאם יהוה צבאות

1. Both verbs שחת and טאטא have lost the pronominal accusative suffix.

2. קפד may be intending קפא, Arabic قَفَارَة, which is "serpens jaculus, --i.e. arrow snake," so named from its striking in the manner of the rattle-snake. The M.T. reads קפוד in Isa. 34:15, but DSIa reads קפד for this passage.

3. With the above mentioned variations and now, with the omission of the conjunction, the verse will read,

> I will make pools of water for the possession of the arrow snake, and I will sweep with the broom of destruction, saith the Lord.

כי מעפן עשן בא ואין [1]מודד [2]במועדיו
בודד במועדיו

1. The labial consonants Beth and Mem are sometimes known to interchange, as in Isa. 39:1 and II Kings 20:12 בראדך מראדך

Another interpretation would be to consider מדוד to be the Pual or Hophal participle of דד "to love, to esteem highly."

2. If we consider במועדים to be the intended form, we may read it as if from מודע "acquaintance, friend." If מדוד be taken as the Pual or Hophal participle of דד "to love, esteem highly," the last clause of the verse now reads, "and none is esteemed by his acquaintances."

ומה יענו[1] מלאכי[2] גוי כי יהוה יסד

ציון ובה יחסו עניי עמו

1. The plural form יענו is more correctly used with the plural subject מלכי גוי. The LXX also has the plural verb ἀποκριθησονται, "shall answer."

2. מלכי גוי reads "kings of a nation" rather than the M.T. מלאכי "messengers of." LXX has βασιλεις "kings."

3. בו now reads "in him" --i.e. the LORD rather than the M.T. "in it" --i.e. Zion. The LXX has δι' αὐτου "through him."

The verse now may be translated, "And what shall the kings of the nation answer? -- that the LORD has established Zion and the poor of his people shall find refuge in him."

RBofM (2N11:125)

BofM (2N27:7) And behold the book shall be sealed; and in the book shall be a revelation from God, from the beginning of the world to the ending thereof.
RBofM (2N11:126)

BofM (2N27:8) Wherefore, because of the things which are sealed up, the things which are sealed shall not be delivered in the day of the wickedness and abominations of the people. Wherefore the book shall be kept from them.
RBofM (2N11:127,128)

BofM (2N27:9) But the book shall be delivered unto a man, and he shall deliver the words of the book, which are the words of those who have slumbered in the dust, and he shall deliver these words unto another;
RBofM (2N11:129)

BofM (2N27:10) But the words which are sealed he shall not deliver, neither shall he deliver the book. For the book shall be sealed by the power of God, and the revelation which was sealed shall be kept in the book until the own due time of the Lord, that they may come forth; for behold, they reveal all things from the foundation of the world unto the end thereof.

RBofM (2N11:131,132)

BofM (2N27:12) Wherefore, at that day when the book shall be delivered unto the man of whom I have spoken, the book shall be hid from the eyes of the world, that the eyes of none shall behold it save it be that three witnesses shall behold it, by the power of God, besides him to whom the book shall be delivered; and they shall testify to the truth of the book and the things therein.
RBofM (2N11:133)

BofM (2N27:13) And there is none other which shall view it, save it be a few according to the will of God, to bear testimony of his word unto the children of men; for the Lord God hath said that the words of the faithful should speak as if it were from the dead.
RBofM (2N11:134)

BofM (2N27:14) Wherefore, the Lord God will proceed to bring forth the words of the book; and in the mouth of as many witnesses as seemeth him good will he establish his word; and wo be unto him that rejecteth the word of God!
RBofM (2N11:135)

BofM (2N27:15) But behold, it shall come to pass that the Lord God shall say unto him to whom he shall deliver the book: Take these words which are not sealed and deliver them to another, that he may show them unto the learned, saying: Read this, I pray thee. And the learned shall say: Bring hither the book, and I will read them.

BofM (2N27:19) Wherefore it shall come to pass, that the Lord God will deliver again the book and the words thereof to him that is not learned; and the man that is not learned shall say: I am not learned.
RBofM (2N11:141)

BofM (2N27:20) Then shall the Lord God say unto him: The learned shall not read them for they have rejected them and I am able to do mine own work; wherefore thou shalt read the words which I shall give unto thee.
RBofM (2N11:142)

BofM (2N27:21) Touch not the things which are sealed, for I will bring them forth in mine own due time; for I will show unto the children of men that I am able to do mine own work.
RBofM (2N11:143)

KJ (29:11 continued) which men deliver to one that is learned, saying, Read this, I pray thee:

KJ (29:12) And the book is delivered to him that is not learned, saying, Read this, I pray thee: and he saith, I am not learned.

BofM (2N27:22) Wherefore, when thou hast read the words which I have commanded thee, and obtained the witness which I have promised unto thee, then shalt thou seal up the book again, and hide it up unto me, that I may preserve the words which thou hast not read, until I shall see fit in mine own wisdom to reveal all things unto the children of men.
RBofM (2N11:144)

BofM (2N27:23) For behold, I am God; and I am a God of miracles; and I will show unto the world that I am the same yesterday, today, and forever; and I work not among the children of men save it be according to their faith.
RBofM (2N11:145)

BofM (2N27:24) And again it shall come to pass that the Lord shall say unto him that shall read the words that shall be delivered him;

1. While Burrows transliterates as אריאל, the middle letter is clearly a Vav. The scribe seems at times to use the Yod and the Vav interchangeably. אריאל("lion of God," therefore champion, or hero) may be intended. אראל is feasible, however. ארא is Aramaic for "behold, see," therefore אראל means "Behold God."

2. סגי is the feminine, singular, imperative of יסף "to add." ארואל is treated as feminine as are cities and groups of people in general.

3. DSIa may possibly read כדוד, "like David," in which case it will accord with the LXX ὡς Δαυιδ.

4. זד means "proud, arrogant, wicked." המון זדיך now reads, "the multitude of thy arrogant ones."

5. "With" did not appear in the First Edition.

6. מצורה, from צור, means "mound, fortress."

7. Metathesis has not been observed--probably a spelling error.

8. LXX also employs a preposition, reading ἀπο οἰνου.

9. A paragogic Nun may have been intended as the final letter.

10. "hath" in the First Edition.

11. The indefinate active is employed rather than the passive form.

12. The Qere is כן agreeing with DSIa.

13. Qal active participle is employed rather than Qal perfect.

14. In verse 13

M.T. reads וְלִבּוֹ רָחַק . . . תְּעֻוַּד אֲנָשִׁים תִּלְמְדָה

DSIa reads ולבו רחוק . . . כמצוד אנשים תלמדה

LXX reads ἡ δὲ καρδία αὐτῶν πορρω ἀπέχει... διδάσκοντες ἐντάλματα ἀνθρώπων

The LXX translator read either the verb רָחַק or the adjective רָחוֹק, and תלמדה as a Piel active participle, both of which are supported by DSIa.

15. The plural form ביבות is found also in M.T. Isa. 27:11.

16. "shew" in the First Edition.

17. חגר may be an example of confusion of gutterals, Chet and Aleph, or ויער חגור ליצרין may read "and the formation of clay ('say' is understood) to the one forming it."

18. "shew" in the First Edition.

19. "not" was retained in the First Edition.

20. אֲפֵלָה means "thick darkness."

21. "and" of the BofM is found in the M.T. and DSIa.

CHAPTER SIX

INTERPRETATION OF THE DATA

The variations of the Isaiah text in the Book of Mormon from the readings of the King James Version were discussed and arranged by Grant Vest[1] into the following general categories:

1. additions -- words or phrases found in the Book of Mormon but not found in the King James Version
2. omissions -- words or phrases found in the King James Version but not found in the Book of Mormon
3. substitutions -- words or phrases different in the Book of Mormon from those in the King James Version

The additions in the Book of Mormon text may possibly reflect readings found on the plates which came into Joseph Smith's possession but lost to the Massoretic text through errors of transmission.

Additions occur in the following verses:[2]

II 5,6,9,10,11,12,13,14,16,19
III 4,6,7,9,14,36

[1]For a detailed discussion of each variation in terms of what the original text might have been, viewed in the light of the Book of Mormon text, see Grant Vest, op. cit.

[2]References are given according to the King James versification. The Book of Mormon verse numbers, if needed, may be found by consulting the appropriate verse in the comparison section.

Omissions from the Book of Mormon text of words or phrases found in the King James Version may suggest that material has been added to the original Hebrew either by mistake or by scribal gloss during the transmission process.

Verses which involve omissions are the following:

With regard to the variations of substitution, Mr. Vest concludes, "The data as a whole, it would seem, tend to suggest the conclusion, which may or may not be correct, that a different Hebrew original is not implied."[1]

In many cases the Book of Mormon perpetuates readings from the King James Version that scholars today consider inadequate. A good example is Isa. 3:16-26 in which many items of apparel possessed by the daughters of Zion are enumerated. By comparing the Revised Standard Version and the Jewish Publication Society texts with the King James Version one may note how drastically different the modern versions are from the readings of the King James Version. The modern versions are generally considered to give a more accurate representation of the basic meaning of the words.

The major concern of this thesis has been the following question: To what extent does the St. Mark's Isaiah Scroll support the Book of Mormon text of Isaiah? We now proceed to a consideration of each instance of support:

3:9 The addition of the conjunction Vav in the DSIa clause ולא כחדו supports the presence of the conjunction in the Book of Mormon clause "and they cannot hide it."

48:8 The conjunction in the Book of Mormon clause "Yea, and thou heardest not," may reflect the presence of the Vav in the DSIa clause אף לוא ידעתה.

48:13 The presence of the conjunction Vav in the DSIa clause וישמודו יחדו accords with the presence of the conjunction in the Book of Mormon clause "and they stand up together."

48:14 Assuming ועשה to be intending ועש or ועשה, the conjunction Vav supports the presence of the conjunction in the Book of Mormon clause, "and he will do his pleasure on Babylon."

49:6 The Book of Mormon reads "the ends of the earth" with the plural noun "ends" replacing the singular form found in the King James Version. DSIa reads קצוי הארץ, with the plural form קצוי replacing the singular form קצה of the Massoretic Text.

None of the above instances of support are really noteworthy.

One's reaction to the scarcity of positive instances of support between DSIa and the Book of Mormon will probably be influenced by one's interpretation of the reason for the Book of Mormon variations, and also by one's evaluation of the nature and significance of the St. Mark's Isaiah Scroll.

Perhaps a summary of DSIa*s peculiarities and its variations from the Massoretic Text will be helpful to the reader for evaluation of the St. Mark's Isaiah Scroll.

In the twenty-one chapters under consideration there were 1507 variations, with a total average of 3.6 variations per verse, or one variation for every 3.89 words. The number of variations for each chapter will now be listed in a chart for easy comparison.

As we note the variations, we see that the majority of variations are orthographical in nature. According to Roberts, despite the freak readings of 1QIsa, the Biblical texts among the Dead Sea Scrolls do indicate the existence of a pre-Massoretic Hebrew text which, for all practical purposes, agrees with the present Massoretic Text.[1] Driver, however, states that 1QIsa is one of the variant texts which existed side by side before Jamnia and which were finally eliminated only when the standard of the Massoretic Text was fixed and all divergent texts were destroyed.[2] Driver is also of the opinion that 1QIsa consists of two distinct scrolls (chapters one to thirty-three and thirty-four to sixty-four) exhibiting different texts but put together to make a complete scroll.[3] A glance at the comparative chart discloses that certain variations occur more frequently in chapters forty-eight to fifty-four than in previous chapters, --e.g. modifications pertaining to suffixes, suggesting either that two or more scribes expressed personal peculiarities of script while working on the different sections, or that two or more Vorlages were employed.

Orlinsky and Driver have affirmed that 1QIsa was copied from memory, but Kahle's assertion that two distinct prototypes were used would nullify the memory theory.[4] Both positions may be substantiated by the selection of certain sets of data. Perhaps there is some truth in both positions, with the scribe writing much from memory and consulting a written Vorlage as the need arose.

The text does not reveal any of the strict rabbinic standards that came to be applied in later times. Various methods of revision and correction were employed in DSIa, including the following:

1. Most frequently the scribe has inserted a letter or word in the space above the line; --e.g. 5:18.

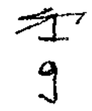

2. Sometimes the scribe placed a series of dots above, below, or around the error; --e.g. 3:17.

3. Occasionally the scribe crossed out a wrong word; --e.g. 2:4.

4. A few times the scribe attempted to erase a word; --e.g. 48:16.

A supralinear addition may be the correction of a mistake or may be indicative of the existence of an alternate text. Most supralinear additions result in alignment with the Massoretic Text. Roberts has noted sixty such amendments.[1]

Scattered through DSIa are undetermined marginal markings, including the following:

Burrows suggests that their function may have been to mark off sections for reading.[1]

Other passages marked by various symbols include 7:8, 8:19, 9:2, 11:11, 29:13, 29:21, 48:20, 49:5, 49:8, 51:7, and 53:1.

The figure ⟩(appears in the margin of the scroll at 49:7, 54:14, and 55:4. Teicher has interpreted such markings to be the Greek letter Chi which he thinks stood for indicating Christological passages.[2] Sonne suggests three possible explanations for ⟩(:

1. ⟩(is the Hebrew Tav, meaning simply "mark" and indicating important passages.

2. ⟩(is the Greek letter Chi, standing for χρεστον "good, important" and serving to mark off useful passages.

3. ⟩(may stand for χριστος but is not a Christian sign.[3]

The resemblances of some DSIa peculiarities to Aramaic should be noted. Mansoor has pointed out the following Aramaisms:[4]

1. The ־הון form of the pronominal suffix; --e.g. 2:2, יחלצ, and 6:13 .

[4]Mansoor, op. cit., p. 44.

2. Verbal suffixes of the third person plural,

a. קטלון for קטלו (masculine);

--e.g. 29:9 שכרון.

b. קטלה for קטלו (feminine);

--e.g. 4:1 החזיקו.

3. Use of the prefix Lamed as a negative particle.

The scribe probably had in mind the Aramaic לא (la); --e.g. 29:9. Use of the prefix Lamed as a negative is found in the Ras-Samra (Ugaritic) texts also.

Bauchet did some comparison of DSIa with Ugaritic. His conclusion states that, "The orthographical variants are not an indication of a purely dialectic tradition but rather vestiges of an older pronunciation of the classical Hebrew."[1] In fact, what some have labelled Aramaisms in the Hebrew may actually have been antique Hebrew.

Mansoor also notes a few similarities to the Samaritan dialect, such as the following:

1. omission of the laryngeals due to defective pronunciation, as occurs in the Samaritan dialect;

2. the pronoun suffixes of the second masculine singular and the second and third plural as a rule have the full forms כה, כמה, המה, to be pronounced Ka, Kemma, hemma, recalling the Samaritan pronunciation.[2]

Much more work needs to be done in comparative language study concerning the St. Mark's Isaiah Scroll.

[2] Ibid., p. 46.

The significant value of DSIa, as the writer sees it, is the performance of the following functions:

1. DSIa discloses how reliable our present text is.

Many differences between DSIa and the Massoretic Text pertain to peculiarities of orthography or morphology not affecting the basic meaning. In other words, there is a remarkable agreement between the two traditions, giving reassuring testimony of the general accuracy of the present text. Indeed the Dead Sea Isaiah Scroll has been a disappointment to many scholars, in that while it conserved many variant readings, few are significant and even fewer are considered superior to the traditional readings.

2. DSIa provides us with a vulgar text dating probably from the second century B.C.

DSIa bears marks of being an unofficial copy, with amateur scribes using a phonetic rather than classical Hebrew spelling. No scholar has voiced the opinion that DSIa was a carefully guarded accurate text. In fact, Roberts has said,

> It is unfortunate too, that the manuscript happens to be such a poor one: indeed one wonders whether it is not one of the main services of this document that it can be used as a demonstration for students of how scribal errors and consequent text corruption actually happened.[1]

3. DSIa demonstrates many of the orthological and morphological peculiarities of those times.

[1]Bleddyn J. Roberts, op. cit., p. 87.

Few if any ortholo ical and morpho raphical peculiarities of DSIa are carried through consistently. Apparently the scribe or scribes employed the forms familiar to his own dialect adding a classical form here or there. Apparently no systematic revision of the scroll was attempted. Variants in spelling and inconsistency of form may suggest that Hebrew was then going through a period of transition.

Peculiarities that occur regularly in DSIa include the following:

--lavish use of matres lectiones

--confusion of gutterals

--tendency to avoid the Vav-consecutive

--retention of the vowel in the feminine singular and the masculine plural imperative

--occurrence of the metathetic Aleph

--the distinguishing of the consonental Yod from the matres lectionis Yod by doubling

--the interchangeability of the Yod and Vav

--retention of the vowel with the second radical in the Qal imperfect plural of the verb

4. DSIa gives support to the theory of single authorship of the Book of Isaiah.

Assuming DSIa to date from the second century B.C. as is generally agreed among scholars, we note that the scribe probably knew of no division of the text into parts. Change of scribe at the end of chapter thirty-three may possibly be construed to support the Deutero-Isaiah theory, but in general, the Isaiah text seems to be "one."

5. DSIa may throw some light on the value of the Septuagint.

A glance through the comparison section will disclose the many instances that DSIa supports the Septuagint against the Massoretic Text. The reader should be aware, however, that in the great majority of cases DSIa agrees with the Massoretic Text against the Septuagint. In other words, the DSIa text is much closer to the Massoretic than to the Septuagintal tradition.

6. DSIa may recover some original readings.

The committee working to bring forth the Revised Standard Version had access to the DSIa text. As a result thirteen DSIa readings were adopted as preferable to those of the Massoretic Text. These amendments were designated as from "one ancient manuscript." In the chapters under consideration in this thesis, we find four of the thirteen readings: 4:24; 14:4; 14:30; and 49:24.

How may a believer in the Book of Mormon react to the data of this study? Harmonization of DSIa's meagerness of support for the Book of Mormon with belief in the Book of Mormon may be couched in the following views:

1. The variant readings in the Book of Mormon do not reflect the readings of any alternate text. They have appeared as a result of Joseph Smith's literary taste or of other reasons not pertaining to a translation process.

2. The St. Mark's Isaiah Scroll is, as Zeitlin and his colleagues have long maintained, a late work. Textual corruption crystallized and preserved by the Massoretic Text had already occurred in the Hebrew scriptures.

3. The St. Mark's Isaiah Scroll was the forerunner of the Massoretic Text. Much of the textual corruption had already occurred by the time of the Qumran community and these corruptions were passed on intact to the scrolls from which the Massoretes worked and hence to our day.

4. The St. Mark's Isaiah Scroll is an unofficial vulgar text probably used to train amateur scribes and, as a result, should not be used to perform any function of the sacred text. To treat it as a text worthy of comparison with the Book of Mormon text is unjustifiable.

5. The variations in the Book of Mormon represent alterations that had occurred in the records of the Lehi colony after they departed from Palestine. Therefore, a recension that later developed in the Holy Land may not be legitimately used to check such variations.

6. A completely non-literal view of the Book of Mormon, treating it as a non-historical spiritual allegory in much the same manner as many modern critics view Jonah, Ruth,

Job, and Daniel, would alleviate the need for textual comparison. Such a view has never appeared in the Mormon press. Most Latter-day Saints would no doubt be extremely hostile to such a modernistic interpretation.

However we interpret the data, we may be sure that many more critical exegeses of the Book of Mormon and the Dead Sea Scrolls need to be attempted. The writer of this study hopes that no doors have been closed to further academic pursuit by the results of this comparison. Rather may new opportunities for continued exploration be uncovered.

Many searching souls will agree that there is value in increasingly intensive study of the Book of Mormon and of the Dead Sea Scrolls.

From the Book of Mormon comes this promise to those who search.

> Behold, I would exhort you that when ye shall read these things, . . . ask God, the Eternal Father, in the name of Christ, if these things are not true; and if ye shall ask with a sincere heart, with real intent, having faith in Christ, he will manifest the truth of it unto you, by the power of the Holy Ghost.
> And by the power of the Holy Ghost ye may know the truth of all things.[1]

Another promise comes from the pen of a spokesman for the scriptures of the Dead Sea Community.

> . . . the Dead Sea Scrolls should be regarded as something more than the subject matter of a scholarly controversy. For those who will read them sympathetically, they possess value in their own right as conveying the religious message of men who gave up the world and were able to find God in a wilderness, simply because they preferred nakedness to motley and because they realized that, in the larger analysis, crucifixion can itself be resurrection.[1]

ABSTRACT

A TEXTUAL COMPARISON
OF THE ISAIAH PASSAGES IN THE BOOK OF MORMON
WITH THE SAME PASSAGES IN THE ST. MARK'S ISAIAH SCROLL OF THE DEAD SEA COMMUNITY

The Book of Mormon contains twenty-one chapters of the Book of Isaiah: two through fourteen, twenty-nine, and forty-eight through fifty-four. The language is primarily that of the King James Version with some variations. The King James Version itself has been translated from the Massoretic Hebrew Text. It is a fair assumption that the variations in the Book of Mormon represent an older, more accurate text than the Massoretic Text.

Textual critics are anxious to find ancient texts and versions of the scriptures in the hope that some of these texts may contain readings closer to the original than does the Massoretic Text thereby avoiding some of the errors of transmission to which the Massoretic Text has succombed during its long history. It is generally expected among believers in the Book of Mormon that the variations in the Book of Mormon will be supported by comparison with the ancient versions and ancient Hebrew texts of Isaiah.

In 1947 a great scroll discovery came to the attention of scholars and public alike. A full scroll of the Book of Isaiah was found with other scrolls in a cave near Ain Feshka in the vicinity of the Dead Sea. This text, which came to be known as the St. Mark's Isaiah Scroll or more fully, the St. Mark's Monastery Scroll of the Book of Isaiah, dates probably from the second century B.C. and is considered to be the product of a scripture-centered monastic community that was located at the present site of Khirbet Qumran. This text of Isaiah predates by one thousand years what was previously considered to be the oldest text of the Old Testament. Latter-day Saints would have the right to expect that this ancient text would support some of the variant readings found in the Isaiah passages in the Book of Mormon.

To investigate every possibility of textual comparison, the Book of Mormon reading was aligned with the King James reading for easy check of variations. The St. Mark's Isaiah Scroll text was concurrently being compared interlineally with the Massoretic Text. Notes of interest pertaining to similarities of texts or peculiarities of the St. Mark's Scroll were appended to each verse. Readings from other versions, especially the Septuagint, were noted on occasion to help clarify a point.

The readings of the St. Mark's Isaiah Scroll agrees with the Book of Mormon text against that of the King James Version in the following verses:

3:9 The addition of the conjunction Vav in the St. Mark's Isaiah Scroll clause ולא כחדו supports the presence of the conjunction in the Book of Mormon clause "and they cannot hide it."

43:8 The conjunction in the Book of Mormon clause "Yea, and thou hearkest not," may reflect the presence of the Vav in the St. Mark's Isaiah Scroll clause וגם לוא שמעת.

48:13 The presence of the conjunction Vav in the St. Mark's Isaiah Scroll clause וישמודו יחדיו accords with the presence of the conjunction in the Book of Mormon clause "and they stand up together.

48:14 Assuming וישה to be intending וישא or וישעה, the conjunction Vav supports the presence of the conjunction in the Book of Mormon clause, "and he will do his pleasure on Babylon.

49:6 The Book of Mormon reads "the ends of the earth" with the plural noun "ends" replacing the singular form found in the King James Version. The St. Mark's Isaiah Scroll reads קצי הארץ, with the plural form קצי replacing the singular form קצה of the Massoretic Text.

None of the above instances of support are really noteworthy.

Increasingly intensive study into the nature and function of the Old and New Testament in the Book of Mormon account is needed, as is a continuing evaluation of the nature and significance of the Dead Sea Scrolls.
